LIFT OFF CORNS!

Apply few drops then lift sore, touchy corns off with fingers

Doesn't hurt a bit! Drop a little Freezone on an aching corn, instantly that corn stops hurting, then you lift it right out. Yes, magic!

A tiny bottle of Freezone costs but a few cents at any drug store, but is sufficient to remove every hard corn, soft corn, or corn between the toes, and the calluses, without soreness or irritation.

Freezone is the sensational discovery of a Cincinnati genius. It is wonderful.

THE LIBERAL CONVENTION.

The Liberal revival is evidently sweeping through Nova Scotia, and the Liberals of South Cape Breton and Richmond have followed the example set by those of Halifax county. At a very large, representative and enthusiastic convention last week, attended from this part of the united constituency by such leading Liberals as Messrs. Geo. W. Kyte, K. C., E. C. Doyle, etc., they selected their delegates and also their alternates, among the latter being A. D. Samson, merchant, of Arichat, until lately a prominent supporter of the Conservative party. There was keen competition for the right of going to the National Liberal Convention, and great enthusiasm marked the voting. The convention composed of not only Liberals but Liberal Unionists, who had returned to the straight Liberal party. The convention enthusiastically and unanimously adopted a resolution endorsing D. D. Mackenzie, K. C., as leader of the Liberal party in the House of Commons, and in closing the resolution said that "they feel that in honoring one of Cape Breton's most noted sons, the whole island of Cape Breton is signally honored. They further express their entire confidence in his ability and integrity for leadership."

Going further than this, they also paid a graceful tribute to the late Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier and unanimously carried a resolution expressing their appreciation of Sir Wilfrid's services to Canada, regret at his death, and instructed that a copy be sent to Lady Laurier. The resolution stated that the Liberals of the riding of South Cape Breton and Richmond, in convention assembled, desire to place on record their sense of the great loss which the Dominion of Canada, and particularly the Liberal party in the Dominion, have sustained in the death of their distinguished leader, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, P.C.G., C.M.G. After extended reference to Sir Wilfrid's outstanding position as the Premier Canadian and his great services to his country and party, the resolution concludes: "The Liberals of Cape Breton, inspired by his noble character and splendid services, will go forward, seeking in the future to justify by their conduct the splendid memory which Sir Wilfrid Laurier bequeathed to our common country. We desire to place on record our profound sympathy with Lady Laurier in her irreparable loss and devoutly pray that the Giver of all Good may extend to her the consolation of His grace and support in her declining years."

GRADING OF WOOL AT ST. PETERS ON 23RD AND 24TH JUNE.

AN ADVANCE WILL BE MADE TO THOSE DESIRING IT.

Rev. R. L. McDonald, P. P., St. Peters, telephoned the RECORD yesterday to insert the following information in our columns:

The days for grading the wool at St Peters are Monday and Tuesday, 23rd and 24th of June. While last year's prices are not expected, indications are that BEST GRADES of unwashed wool realize about 75c a lb. An advance of 35c. a lb. will be made to any person desiring it.

IS YOUR BIRTH REGISTERED?

Our readers will be interested to learn that all persons born in this province prior to 1908 may apply for registration of their births to the Deputy Registrar General, Halifax.

For many years prior to 1908 there was no registration of births in this province and consequently the births of the majority of Nova Scotians are officially unrecorded. The advantage of being able to produce an official birth certificate at any time is obvious.

PROFITEERING IN HAY.—Not all the smart work is done in the West. A report from Harborville, N. S., says: "Hay was brought into this farming community of ours the other day from St. John, N. B., that cost the festive granger that ordered it forty cold plunks a ton. The same horny-headed granger is an ardent supporter of the government that promised how to be sore red along with everything else that either man or beast has to eat."

At every turn the High Cost of Living is under fire. Bring it down and the chief source of present unrest will disappear.

RECORD readers are interested readers because they find something in our columns every week to admire and approve.

It is a well known fact among nerve specialists that by an examination of the thumb they can tell if the patient is affected, or likely to be affected, by paralysis or not, as the thumb will indicate this a long time before there is any trace of the disease in any part of the system.

It seems, the Cons. don't want an election this year and the Libs. are also of the same mind. This is the only time in history that they have ever agreed upon any question.

If Canada could supply Great Britain with only the eggs which were formerly obtained in Russia, the prosperity of small farmers would continue for years, according to the Canadian Trade Commission's information from London.

KEMPT ROAD.

The weather man having been in a very agreeable mood, farming operations are well nigh finished to this locality, and considering the cold and late spring it is surprising to note that the grass crop looks promising.

William Dan McLeod, who was attached to the Siberian Expeditionary Forces, has received his discharge and is now visiting his home here. W. D. was very fortunate, having been in the army for more than a year, yet was never attached to an overseas draft. He is going back to his former position as clerk in the C. G. R. freight office, Truro.

Time is fleeting and ere long the school children will be having their annual vacation with its looked for pleasures; but the occasion of pleasure often has its cause for regret as well. The school children of Kempt Road will regret the parting with their instructor for the term just about to expire. Indeed, some who but yesterday were subject to the schoolmaster's rod will regret Miss Annie M. McRae's departure; but consolation may be found in the fact that there are "ties more binding than those of a school agreement," and we will always welcome Miss McRae whether her visit be transient or permanent.

M J F Macneil, Inspector of Schools, passed through here recently. This is the busy time of year for that official.

The people of Kempt Road had, on the evening of the 6th inst, the pleasure of listening to the Rev J A McLellan, a native of this place, he having conducted a meeting here. It is always a pleasure to have the Rev J A visit Kempt Road, for his countenance, his heartfelt earnestness, coupled with the earnestness and intensiveness of his advice, almost unconsciously leads his hearers to higher and nobler ideals. The seed which he sows cannot but germinate and be productive of a deserved reward.

During winter and early spring some of our local boodlers tried to feed us up on the amount of road monies to be spent this summer. The time is now ripe for such operations to commence, but silence reigns. At any rate, if there are monies to be spent we trust some other than the haphazard method employed the preceding year in this section of the work may be adopted, as it was nothing more than a camouflaged waste of money. Will the wail of a suffering public ever receive attention? Yes, I expect on the eve of a local election some balm or intoxicant will be applied.

PARTED BY GOLD

She sighed, and the sigh was echoed by the maid who had come to dress her, for it is a difficult thing to affix gauze wings and arrange the hair if a fairy who hangs her head when she should lift it up, and sighs at her fate when she should be casting self-admiring glances at the mirror.

"Would you mind sitting a little around, Miss Montague?" said the patient dresser, and Miss Montague, with a reproachful start, did as she was requested, saying:

"I am giving you a deal of trouble, Miss Morris, but I will sit still now. Will that do?"

"Thank you, miss, don't you mention it," said the dresser. "Won't you have any powder, miss?"

"No, no powder," said Mary, and in truth, she was quite pale enough.

Away went the dresser, and Mary, wand in hand, sat waiting her call.

Presently a tap came to the door, and, opening it, she saw her father dressed as the pirate, standing there.

"Mary, my dear," he said, wiping his brow and looking anxious, "what has happened in the greenroom? I left as Mr. Anderson came in, and—and—and something seems to have put him out."

She colored faintly.

"Don't look so anxious, dear," she said, laying her hand upon his arm. "It was nothing to trouble about. Mr. Tubbs and he were—were quarreling, and I—well, I parted them. Oh papa, is it not a shame?" and the tears were ready to fall again.

"Er—er—" He hesitated, coloring with her. "Oh, my Mary, Mary, this is no place for you."

"Hush," she said, hurriedly. "We are never to think of that any more, dear. But how tired you look. Ah, there is something else. What did you come to say, dear?"

"I—nothing—that is, Mary, that gentleman is at the wings again."

"Well?" she said, stooping to arrange the folds of her dress.

"Well," he said, then stopped. Her face was bent down, and did not, as it usually did, help him.

[illegible] "don't [illegible] to-night, my darling; it doesn't matter, pass around."

"Yes, dear," she said, obediently. "But why—"

"I can't stop," he said, hurriedly. "There's the call. Mind, the other side."

She looked after him and sighed.

Poor, weak, loving heart! he could not even trust her, the life of his life, and the stay of his existence.

With a tiny little feeling of disappointment at her heart, when her name was called, she passed around and entered the stage from the opposite side.

But circumstances are capricious sometimes, and it happened that Mr. Montague's precautions were thrown away. Five minutes before the fairy's entrance the gentleman, who was so much to be shunned, had an attack of love-nervousness; and he crossed around from the side which she usually passed and so was actually brushed by her dress at the opposite wings.

His eyes brightened and he smiled. Not so those of the Spirit of the Deep, for, as the Fairy Queen approached him, his face darkened, and his eyes sparkled angrily.

"What did you come from that side for?" he muttered under his breath, and Mary faltered a moment in her open speech, looked back toward the wing, and, seeing for the first time the handsome face there, colored brightly.

"Speak up!" shouted the gallery, "Speak up!"

He uttered an oath and did speak up, with such a passionate, savage tone that the pit applauded noisily, and the young girl at his side shrank a little away, and, when her part was done, ran with a scared look to her room. Anderson strode off and walked straight up to the place where Jack had been standing.

"I'll have no hangers about here," he muttered, wrathfully. "If she wants any of her fine gentlemen let her dangle them at her apron strings outside or at home."

But though thoroughly fired up with angry jealousy, when he found himself face to face with the high-bred aristocrat, he quailed and quieted beneath his calm, tranquil gaze, and muttering a surly "Good-evening" to Jack's pleasant, open-hearted salutation, slunk off, bullying the carpenters and the troupe as he went.

Jack mingled with the many-colored crowd, and moving with them, found himself at the other side again and looking at the house.

Presently a voice—Mr. Montague's—spoke just at his ear, in answer to a question of one of the actors.

"I do not know, I am sure. Mr. Anderson could tell you, perhaps. Kept the curtains carefully closed, eh? Ah, just so; person of distinction, no doubt. I hear the 'Pirate's Gorge' has caused some sensation even in the West," and with a modest cough the pirate looked up mildly at the private box with the closed curtains.

Jack turned and held out his hand.

"Good-evening," he said, "I am here in the mimic world again, you see."

"Yes, sir," said Montague, but coldly. "I see you are. I have noticed you in the front several times lately."

Jack nodded candidly.

"Yes," he said, with something like a sigh. "I am fond of the theatres."

"Of one theatre," corrected Mr. Montague, eyeing him suspiciously.

"Well, of one," said Jack, pained at the old man's suspicions, yet ready to acknowledge that, though unfounded, they were excusable. "Yes, I am fond of the Signet. I could see the extravaganza a hundred times, and the 'Pirate's Gorge,' too. But I am here to-night for a double purpose; to make restitution——"

"Indeed!" said Mr. Montague. "Ah, Jones, that is a lady in the box yonder. I thought it would be. I saw the edge of her dress."

"Indeed, sir?" said Jones, eagerly. "Don't know who she is. The duchess, perhaps, or Lady Twittleton. Signet's looking up, Mr. Montague."

Jack handed the lorgnette to the pirate.

"Thank you," said Mr. Montague, with a simple bow. "I am curious to see the occupant of that box. Did you notice her when you came in?"

"I came in," said Jack, by the stage entrance. I want to return to Miss Mon—"

"Mr. Montague," called some one, "Miss Montague wishes to speak to you," and Mr. Montague, with a hurried excuse, hastened away.

Jack sighed.

"This handkerchief has a fatality with it. It seems we are not to part unless I break the charm by returning it to the hands of the rightful owner."

Presently the rightful owner came tripping along. He stepped back to let her pass, and bowed with as much respect as that with which he would have saluted a duchess.

Jack stooped, recovered it and handed it to her.

"I have something else belonging to you," he said. "May I return it when you come back?"

"Yes," she said, faintly, and with a blush, ran on the stage.

Jack turned, his heart beating, but his face calm, and confronted Mr. Anderson.

"I hope I am not in your way," he said.

"No, oh no," replied Anderson, meaning "Yes," very much," and followed the Fairy Queen on.

Jack took up his position at the wing again, and waited impatiently till Miss Montague came off, which she did presently, and looking timidly before her and stopping at his side for that possession of hers he had mentioned.

Jack took the handkerchief from his pocket and held it out half reluctantly.

"That is it," he said, "not very valuable, but he who steals a pin commits a sin, you know, and—"

"Thank you," she said, taking it with evident embarrassment. "I missed it, but did not know I had dropped it in the theatre. It was very kind of you to come on purpose to return it."

"And yet," said Jack, "you are angry with me for coming."

He spoke so respectfully, with such a touch of earnestness in his voice, that was dangerously musical also, that Mary Montague felt she must answer.

"No, not angry," she said, keeping her eyes down, "but—no, not angry."

"You make me almost happy," said Jack. "Will you not take the 'but' away? You avoided me the other night. Are you afraid of me?"

"I—" she stopped and looked around.

"You have cause," said Jack, hurrying on and feeling the embarrassment of her position. "Miss Montague, you will forgive me, if I seem presumptuous, even rude, but I have for you nothing but good will and respect. If I sought to do him you love best in the world a service would you refuse to help me because you know nothing of me more than that I am a stranger and forward enough to speak to you thus?"

It was a strange speech, but to Mary, spoken in the gentle, musical and reverential voice, it was sweet.

She raised her fine, thoughtful eyes and examined his face.

"You would help my father?" she asked, gently. "How?"

"By placing him in a position where his talents would be recognized," said Jack, eagerly. "Miss Montague, I have some influence. I can exert it in his behalf, but I cannot do so unless you will help and trust me."

She looked at him again and sighed.

"I will trust you," she said. "Your face looks kind, your voice sounds true, and you say you can help my dear father. Oh, sir—"

"He is so tired, so weary of this life; it hurts him, is killing him. If you can help him to get away from it, to rest quietly—"

There was a sob choking there.

Jack's lips trembled.

He was unused to feminine emotion. The creed of his set was, "Die and speak not." The stifled outburst moved him.

"Hush," he said. "I—I am very sorry—I did not mean to—pray do not cry. I shall never forgive myself. But you, yourself, do not dislike this life? Are you weary and tired of it, and do you not long for quiet and rest?"

A wistful smile crossed her fair face for a moment, but it had melted into a calm one of resignation as she looked up into his.

"I do not mind for myself," she replied, "only for him—only for him. But you do not know him. Why——"

"Why do I interest myself? you would ask. May I reply truthfully?"

"Yes, if at all," she replied, in a low voice.

"Then, because he is your father, Miss Montague. Do not look so alarmed, I implore you. You said I was to speak truthfully, and indeed I should have done so in any case. You think I am wrong in coming here night after night to get a word with you, but you do not think it wicked to love the flowers, I saw you kiss them the other night."

She looked up in her startled embarrassment, and said, quickly:

"Your flowers. How could you be so deceitful, sir?"

"Because I would not offend you," he said, boldly. "You would not have picked it up if I had thrown them, but you kissed them when they came from a child."

She nodded.

"You must never throw me any more," she said, quickly, but with a touch of sadness.

"Why not?" he said, but added quickly: "I will not if you do not wish it, if you will only say you forgive me for sending those."

"I forgive you," she said, "if there is anything to forgive. And father—you will help him? Can I trust you, sir? Forgive me, but it seems so strange, so untrue, that you a——"

"A stranger," he said.

"A stranger," she continued, "should be so kind. I cannot understand it."

"Nor I," she said, almost woefully. "Do not let us try. Enough that I feel that I could go to the end of the world for you—you believe me. I know —and that you will let me show how [illegible] by helping your father."

She looked at him and sighed.

"Am I doing wrong?" she said, half audibly.

"No," he said, stoutly. "And now tell me, where is your home?"

She looked around at her father, sitting in a chair, with his tired, weary face turned toward the fire in the greenroom, and replied, in a low voice:

"In Harleigh street."

Jack repeated it, eagerly.

"I shall not forget it," he said; "and now will you show your trust in me still further?"

"In what way?" she asked, timidly.

"By allowing me to send you home in my cab. I can walk," he continued, eagerly, as she shook her head. "I am younger, stronger than he is. Pray let me, it is not much to grant, and it would make me so happy."

Before she could reply the callboy cried her name. She started and turned from him to the triumphal car, in which she ascended to the realms of bliss.

Jack walked over to Mr. Montague and laid his arm on his shoulder. The old man started and turned his face up, and Jack saw that the daughter had spoken truly when she called it a weary, tired one.

"I have taken the liberty of placing my cab at your disposal to-night, sir; you are tired. I can see, and no wonder, for your part is a heavy one. You will not refuse me?"

Mr. Montague looked at him a moment in silence.

The tired blue eyes met his unflinchingly. The face looked incapable of falsehood.

"I thank you, sir," he said, simply. "I do not know why you should put yourself out of the way for me and mine."

"Sir," said Jack, as simply, "my father taught me to respect age."

At this speech, surely as unsophisticated a one as was ever heard behind the scenes of a theatre, Mr. Montague started. But, strange to say, not so much at the speech as at the voice.

"Er—er," he said, in his nervous way, scanning the young man's face keenly. "I accept sir, and thank you. Er—will you tell me your name?"

"My name is Hamilton, John, though no one calls me so—Jack Hamilton."

Mr. Montague nodded with an air almost of disappointment.

"Hamilton," he repeated, thoughtfully. "No, I know no one by the name of Hamilton."

The last burst of applause for the night announced that the curtain was down, and Mr. Montague ran with a flash of interest to meet his daughter.

She came off with the Spirit of the Deep at her side, and blushed as she saw Jack standing beside her father.

Anderson pushed forward.

"Clear the way, you fellows," he said, not with a great show of politeness, "make way for Mary to go to her dressing-room."

Then he returned and stood hovering about Jack, who, if not unconscious of his presence, looked so.

Jack stood talking to Mr. Montague during the few minutes taken up by Mary in changing her costume for one more suitable to the climate, and when she reappeared dressed in the utmost simplicity, fairy still, in dark brown and gray, he stood back and did not offer his arm, which he knew beloved one of the old man, but he would have been refused for the well-followed them, and when they reached the stage door called his cab.

"Snowing," he said, and with quiet self-possession put up an umbrella to shield them from the flickering flakes.

Mary, still clinging to her father's arm, gave him her right hand, and he helped her into the brougham with his head uncovered.

Then, giving the direction to the coachman, he lifted his hat and watched it as it rolled off noiselessly, for the snow was thick.

When he turned he saw that another brougham had been lingering in the street, and that Anderson, the stage manager, was standing in the entrance watching him with angry and malicious eyes.

He just glanced at him, buttoned up his coat and walked with long strides homeward.

Directly his back was turned the young actor's face went livid, his clinched fist was raised and shaken after him, and a loud and audible curse bust from the jealous, writhing lips.

The ugly expression might have been seen very plainly by the occupant of the loitering brougham—perhaps it it was, for the vehicle crossed suddenly and stopped exactly opposite the stage door.

Anderson, who was about to re-enter the theatre, bowed angrily.

"Another confounded swell," he snarled; "the place is alive with them."

He stopped suddenly as the window was dropped and a voice, a lady's, said, in highbred accents:

"May I speak with you?"

"Be good enough to walk to the end of the street," said the voice, "my coachman shall drive me down there."

THE FRYATT MURDER

(Philadelphia Record.)

Nothing could so comprehensively disclose the sinuosities of German psychology as the proceedings in regard to Captain Fryatt. The captain was shot by order of a court-martial on the ground that he had tried to ram a submarine. He got away at the time, but after more than a year the Germans got him and killed him.

This was only of a piece with most of Germany's conduct during the war, and there was no obvious reason why it should have lain more heavily than many other things on the German conscience. The Provisional Government might have disclaimed all responsibility for what the Imperial Government did. But the Fryatt murder seems to have disquieted Germany more than Miss Cavell's murder, or the deportation of 125,000 Belgians, 6,000 of whom perished, or the sinking of the Lusitania.

Germany seems to have been affrighted by Captain Fryatt's ghost, and in an effort to lay it a national court-martial was created to review the proceedings. On that court was Professor Schuechking, reputed to be a great authority on international law, who explained to his associates that it was a principle of the law of nations that a civilian committing an act of war made himself liable to the death penalty.

This is true enough, but if only a small part of the truth involved in the Fryatt case. The German pundit produces as much international law as will vindicate Germany, and ignores the rest, and his countrymen stand awe-struck at the vastness of his erudition. The law of nations provides that a naval vessel in war may summon a merchant vessel to stop and submit to search and seizure. If he refuses it is at his own peril. If he tries flight it is lawful to sink him. If he fights he is outside of the law of nations, and in the event of capture may be shot.

But the essential fact in such a case is that he refused a lawful command to stop and be searched. The worst that could happen to him if he were an enemy would be capture. But the German submarines did not summon vessels to surrender. They did not call on them to submit to search and seizure. The captain of the Lusitania had no opportunity to save the lives of his passengers and crew by surrendering; the vessel was simply blown up without warning. In nearly all cases the submarines proceeded in this manner. Every merchant captain knew when he saw a submarine what was in store for him. The submarine would only sink him if it could, and it might or might not afford any opportunity for the persons on board to escape. In most cases no opportunity was given; the vessel was sunk with all on board unless the crew managed to flee while their vessel was going down, and they might be hundreds of miles from shore and the weather be stormy.

Professor Schuecking and the national court-martial justify the killing of Captain Fryatt by an appeal to that international law which the German submarines treated with contempt from the beginning of the war to the end. The law is made for foreigners; Germans are always above law.

Costly Law Proceedings.

The folly of rushing to the law to settle every little dispute is demonstrated by an action between two potters for a sum of £2. After being in court for eleven years, it was put an end to by being referred to arbitrators, who decided in favor of the defendant in the case, and ordered the plaintiff to pay all the costs incurred in the proceedings, which were assessed at £1,000.—London Tit-Bits.

Worth Knowing.

String any spare buttons you may have on a cord, that they may be easy to go when you want them.

You can have onion tops green all winter, ready for salads, soups, etc., by putting an onion into top (only touching the water a little) of a vase filled with water.

When baking potatoes, grease them first with a little butter, and when cooked they will be beautifully brown and crisp, with the glazed appearance that makes them so appetizing.

If the house is infested with ants, dip a sponge, into sweetened water and lay it where they can get at it. They will soon cluster upon it and the sponge can then be dipped in hot water.

Before applying black lead as a polish make a pad of old cloth and rub soot from the back of the grate or from the flue on all the greasy parts. The grate will then take the polish with much less labor than usual.

Tells All About a Safe Medicine That Relieves After One Dose.

That throbbing pain at the base of the spine is caused by improper kidney action. Fix up the kidneys and the backache goes in a hurry.

The most wonderful kidney medicine ever made is Dr. Hamilton's Pills. They contain the juices of certain herbs which soothe and heal all kidney illness. It's a pleasure to use Dr. Hamilton's Pills. They relieve after the first dose, give you a new feeling entirely, remove that dull, throbbing backache, correct urinary disorders, stop headaches, and vague pains through the muscles and joints.

Forty years of success stand behind Dr. Hamilton's Pills, which are prepared in the laboratories of the famous Catarrhozone Company, and can be depended upon as a safe, swift, and certain cure for Backache, Kidney, Liver, Stomach, or Bladder Troubles. Sold everywhere in 25c boxes.

WORTH KNOWING.

To make a faded dress white, boil it in two gallons of water in which a half cupful of cream of tartar is dissolved.

Make your piece-bags of mosquito netting. You can then find the location of any piece without dumping out the entire contents of the bag.

Essence of peppermint, applied with a soft cloth and rubbed vigorously, will remove white spots from highly polished surfaces on furniture.

When washing and rinsing colored material add a tablespoonful of Epsom salts to each gallon of water, and even the most delicate shades will neither fade nor run.

When working a pattern in crochet which requires a chain on which to work, first make the chain and whip it to a piece of muslin. This is a great help, as one can work much faster and more easily than on the chain by itself. After starting the work it can be ripped from the muslin.

When you wish to embroider sheer material baste it on heavy waxed paper. You will find this more convenient than to use a hoop. The needle passes readily through the goods, but slides over the paper, and the work can be bent into any shape and not wrinkle, since the paper is very strong and flexible.

Rust can be removed from steel by covering it with sweet oil for a day; then rub it with a lump of fresh lime and polish in the ordinary way.

To glaze linen, add a teaspoonful of salt and one of finely scraped soap to each pint of starch in which it is dipped.

To insure the bluing being evenly distributed in making blue rinse water for clothes add a little salt to it.

Minard's Liniment Relieves Neuralgia

Dangerous Cargoes.

At first thought it would seem that dynamite was a cargo to be carefully avoided. But from a sailor's point of view there are far more dangerous cargoes. He dreads, for instance, a cargo of sugar! Put hundreds of tons of cane sugar in casks in the hold of a vessel and let the ship steam through a spell of hot weather. The odor is sickening. The sailors cannot get the sweet taste out of their mouths and crave vinegar or lemon juice—anything sour. They lose their appetites and are always glad when a voyage on which the cargo was sugar is over. Coffee is as disagreeable as sugar, in addition being very dangerous.

Cotton is a really dangerous cargo. If a little oil happens to touch raw cotton the result is spontaneous combustion. A single bale of cotton saturated with such an oil as boiled linseed and lying at the bottom of a hold can be constantly given off if the product is exposed to air.

Shipmasters dislike to carry drums of acid where they can be reached easily. A Chilean ship recently put in at the Falkland Islands leaking badly. Her cargo was made up of drums of acid and chalk. The acid had leaked from the drums and mixed with the chalk, forming carbonic acid gas in the hold. This gas is deadly and the crew could not make repairs. Meanwhile, the acid had gathered in the bottom of the hold and eaten away the iron frames of the ship.

WELL SATISFIED WITH BABY'S OWN TABLETS

Mrs. Edmond Gagne, Tikuape, Que., writes: "I am well satisfied with Baby's Own Tablets. They are absolutely necessary in homes where there are little children. They cured my baby of constipation, and I would not be without them." Thousands of mothers always keep a box of Baby's Own Tablets on hand as a safeguard against constipation, colic, colds, simple fevers or any other of the minor ills of little ones. The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

THE NORTH ATLANTIC

(Winnipeg Free Press.)

That sea power depends on something else besides armor-plate and 17-inch guns is quite unobtrusively mentioned by Admiral Beatty in his remarks and the British squadrons which blockaded the German ports. "Stretched across the waste of waters from west of the Hebrides to the Arctic icefields, these ships kept their watch and ward in weather that had to be experienced to be understood."

The stretch of sea the blockaders had to patrol is well described by the admiral as a "waste of waters." The Atlantic, which surges against the fanged coasts of the Western Islands, is the home of Tempests. It spreads, lonesome and sullen, into the frozen zones of the ice-cap, dotted by a few bare rocks, overhung by steely, unfriendly skies, the air too heavily laden with brine, the whole region storm-haunted and alien to man.

In the course of the centuries this wild northern sea has preserved all its characteristics; the blasts of the hurricane filled the sails of the Norsemen's long ships, the icy spray lashed the oarsmen, the black teeth hidden in the curling foam ripped the timbers and strewed the waves with corpses. This bleak water was one of the highways down which passed the great migrations which peopled northern France and founded the Norman dynasty.

It was a people compounded of the races who long ago made a highway of this savage sea-track that guarded the British Isles during the war. It is no idle figure of speech to describe the modern Briton as a descendant of the sea-rovers. That, precisely, is what a great many Britons are, and that makes them the wardens of the North Atlantic to-day just as their pirate fathers were its wardens centuries ago, they in their swan-prowed longboats, and the modern Briton in his destroyer.

Battleships are easy of construction, brave men are common to all races, but the spirit that can thrive on the waters which the blockading fleets had to guard is the spirit on which British sea-power rests. It is not the sea fights, the winning or losing of battles, that will determine the control of the sea. It is the actual ruling of the waves themselves. A chance shot may sink a dreadnought, but the power to dominate by seamanship the waste of water stretching from the outer Hebrides to the Arctic Ocean—this goes to the foundation of naval supremacy.

An Old English Custom.

In the northern counties of England there was practiced at Easter up to at least half a century ago the curious custom of "lifting." It must still exist. I have before me, writes a correspondent, a newspaper cutting of 1869 giving an account of an indignant commercial traveler of the ritual to which he was subjected on Easter Tuesday by the maids of a hotel at Crewe. He was placed in a chair, lifted three times and kissed by the merry revelers. It appeared that a like privilege might have been his for the exercising on Easter Monday—a privilege which absence made impossible. There is a remonstrance of a century earlier by a man who was treated by the maids of the Talbot Inn, Shrewsbury, in a similar fashion, but who in addition had to pay a fee.—London Chronicle.

Heart Fluttering Easily Corrected

GOOD ADVICE TO FOLKS BOTHERED WITH PALPITATION, WEAKNESS, ETC.

If your heart flutters, be careful. An attack is liable to come on at any time. Excitement, over-exertion or emotion may cause it.

If blood rushes to the head, if palpitation and short breath are noticeable, there's cause for alarm.

If you want a good honest remedy try Ferrozone. We recommend Ferrozone because we know it's just right for heart trouble. It cured A. F. Beattie, who lives at Allen Hotel, Bay City, Mich. See if your symptoms resemble these:

SOME SYMPTOMS OF WEAK HEART.

Nervousness,	Palpitation,
Trembling,	Dizziness,
Sinking Feeling,	Heart Paint,
Short Breath,	Weakness.

Mr. Beattie says:

"I was weak and miserable.

"I was subject to heart palpitation and dizziness.

"As I grew worse I began to have trembling and sinking sensations.

"Ferrozone strengthened my heart, gave vigor to my nerves, soon made me well. It's a great rebuilder."

By strengthening the muscles of the heart, giving proper circulation and causing a general rebuilding of the whole system, Ferrozone is bound to do grand work in heart trouble; try it. 50c per box, or six for $2.50, at all dealers or direct by mail from The Catarrhozone Co., Kingston, Ont.

TIMELY RECIPES.

PASTE FOR PIE.

To make paste for one pie take one and one-half cups pastry flour, one little teaspoonful salt, four and one-half tablespoonfuls lard and cold water. Mix flour and salt together and sift once. And the shortening and chop with a case knife until lumps disappear and the mixture is crumbled. Add water a few drops at a time, stirring with a case knife until the paste barely sticks together. Use the fingers to squeeze into shape. Divide into two parts, toss on a floured board and roll with light upward strokes of the rolling pin, moving the crust often to prevent sticking. Warm ingredients, too much water and much handling are causes for a tough crust. Line the pie plate carefully, being sure that there are no air bubbles underneath. Do not trim off under crust. Put in filling, moisten edges with cold water water and lay on perforated upper crust. Cut off edges of crust with the palm of the hand rather than a knife in order to seal more securely. A pie should be baked about 15 minutes in a moderately hot oven.

Take three or four pounds of cheaper cut of mutton, remove the fat and try out, cut the meat into one inch cubes and brown in the fat. Put in a kettle, add one medium-sized onion, chopped fine, and cover with boiling water. Simmer for two hours and then add one-half cup of rice and two teaspoonfuls of curry powder and salt and pepper to taste. One-half hour before serving add two cups of diced raw potato. Serve on a platter surrounded with a border of toast points.

BARLEY COOKIES.

Two tablespoonfuls fat, two tablespoonfuls sugar, one-half cupful molasses, one-half cupful water, one-quarter teaspoonful ginger, one heaping teaspoonful soda, one cupful white flour, and one and one quarter cupfuls barley flour. Drop from spoon.

QUICK RYE BREAD.

One tablespoonful vegetable fat, one tablespoonful sugar, one egg, three-quarters cupful milk, one teaspoonful salt, one-half cupful chopped dates, two cupfuls rye flour, one teaspoonful soda. Bake in a moderate oven about 40 minutes. Makes one large loaf.

HAITI DEVIL WORSHIP.

West Indies Blacks Are Vicious Savages.

Aside from warlike considerations, people have become accustomed to being safe that it is something of a shock to learn that only a few hundred miles from the centres of American culture there is an almost savage country, the islands of the West Indies are, as a rule, the abodes of enlightenment where any one, man or woman, may travel without fear of molestation. "But such is not the case in Haiti," says A. Hyatt Verrill, in "The Book of the West Indies." "Here the shortcomings, the failures, the savage instincts of the blacks have been fed and fostered for centuries. From untamed jungles they were brought in reeking, pest-ridden slave ships to starve beneath the lash. Debased, untaught, they rose, and in a resistless wave of black swept the dominating whites from the land. Then were loosened up the pent-up hatred, the undying lust for revenge, the suppressed savagery of the African races, and slaughter, rapine, incendiarism, torture and debauchery stalked naked through the stricken land.

Haiti has improved considerably since then, but there is yet much room for improvement. The only wonder is that any vestige of civilization remains, that there is the semblance of rule, of industry, of order in the republic." Among the barbarisms now prevalent in Haiti are voodooism and obeah, the former a kind of devil worship, and the latter a form of witchcraft. "In its most fanatical form voodoism requires human sacrifices, which are accompanied by cannibalistic feasts and unspeakable orgies. . . . Obeah, on the other hand, is merely witchcraft with no religious significance whatever, and in its most malignant form consists of poisoning with devilish ingenuity, and in its commonest and least virulent form amounts merely to a lot of nonsense, hocus-pocus and mummery."

RECIPES.

THRIFT FLITTERS.

Two cups cold mashed potatoes, ½ cup left-over corn, 1 onion, minced fine, 1 beaten egg. Salt and pepper.

Mix well and saute in a frying pan in which is a teaspoon of cooking oil. Brown well on one side, then carefully turn and brown on the other side. Peas or salmon can be substituted for the corn with equal results.

STUFFED DATES SUPREME.

Two pounds dates, one-third cup black walnuts, one-third cup pimento cheese, ¼ teaspoon salt.

Wash the dates in warm water, dry them. Cut a slit in the sides and carefully remove the stones. Fill the cavity with the cheese and chopped walnut paste, well blended with the salt. Firmly press the filled dates together and pack closely in a waxed paper lined box.

STUFFED PRUNES.

One pound sweet prunes, one-third cup black walnuts, ½ cup raisins, 1 tablespoon lemon juice.

Select large, well-shaped prunes. Soak over night, dry open carefully and remove the stones. Mix chopped raisins, black walnuts and lemon juice. When thoroughly blended, refill the prunes with the mixture.

PORK CHOPS AND ESCALLOPED POTATOES.

Fill a baking dish with sliced raw potatoes. Almost cover with water or milk. Lay pork chops on top of these. Season with salt, pepper, dredge with flour. Bake in oven, turning the chops once. The fat from the meat will flavor the potatoes nicely.

STEAMED FRUIT PUDDING.

One quarter pound seeded raisins, one-eight pound fat, one-eight pound citron, one egg, ½ cup sugar, one-quarter teaspoon nutmeg, one quarter teaspoon cinnamon, one eighth teaspoon salt, one-quarter cup milk (generous measure), one cup breadcrumbs, ground fine; one-half cup flour, one and one-quarter cups chopped apples, Rind and juice of three slices of lemon, medium size.

Wash and dry raisins. Cut into pieces. Slice citron very fine. Cream fat and sugar, add beaten egg and seasonings, also lemon juice and grated rind. Add milk and flour alternately. Dredge raisins with flour and add to mixture. Fold in breadcrumbs and then the chopped apples. Turn into a well-greased mold and steam five hours. Serve with maple sauce. This recipe makes enough for two meals.

CHICKEN SHORTCAKE.

To two cups of cold cooked chicken or roast veal add one-half cup of finely sliced mushrooms and one-half tablespoon of salt one-quarter tablespoon of grated onion. Season with one-half tablespoon of salt, one-quarter teaspoon of paprika, and one-eighth teaspoon of celery salt. Add one and one-half cups of chicken gravy. Put between layers of shortcake two cups of gravy. Serve hot with corn fritters and head lettuce with French dressing. This may be served as the meat course for Sunday dinner in place of roast beef. This shortcake will prove a favorite method of using the left-over meats.

Fashionable Fabrics.

Printed georgettes for overdresses.

Jersey-striped sports silks for summer.

Serviceable foulards and softest satins.

Changeable taffetas are an interesting revival.

SPRING IMPURITIES CLOG THE BLOOD

A TONIC MEDICINE IS A NECESSITY AT THIS SEASON.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People are an all-year-round tonic, blood-builder and nerve restorer. But they are especially valuable in the spring when the system is loaded with impurities as the result of the indoor life of the winter months. There is no other season of the year when the blood is so much in need of purifying and enriching, and every dose of these pills helps to make new, red blood. In the spring one feels weak and tired—Dr. Williams' Pink Pills give new strength. In the spring the appetite is often poor—Dr. Williams' Pink Pills develop the appetite, tone the stomach and aid weak digestion. It is in the spring that poisons in the blood find an outlet in disfiguring pimples, eruptions and boils—Dr. Williams' Pink Pills speedily clear the skin because they go to the root of the trouble in the blood. In the spring anaemia, rheumatism, neuralgia, erysipelas and many other troubles are most persistent because of poor, weak blood, and it is at this time, when all nature takes on new life, that the blood most seriously needs attention. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills actually renew and enrich the blood, and this new blood reaches every organ and every nerve in the body, bringing new health and new strength to weak, easily tired men, women and children. Here is a bit of proof: Miss Anna Patterson, R.F.D. No. 1, Thorold, Ont., says: "My trouble was one of general weakness, which thinned my blood and gave me at times unbearable headaches, loss of appetite and also loss in weight. I tried several medicines, but without success. Then I heard of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and decided to give them a fair trial. The result is that I feel like a new person. My appetite improved, I gained in weight, my blood is thoroughly purified, and my face cleared of some unsightly pimples, which had troubled me. If one good turn deserves another, then I have much pleasure in recommending Dr. Williams' Pink Pills."

If you need a medicine this spring try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills—they will not disappoint you. These pills are sold by all medicine dealers, or you can get them by mail at 50c. a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Some of Her Fads.

Whatever else she wears, she finishes her costume with a string of beads, a quaint necklace or a silver sautoir. This last is the newest fashion, and it is a silver chain, set with rhinestones or pearls, on the end of which she fastens a tiny watch or locket. And lockets are quite the fad again, also.

Modesty pieces are the newest bits of neckwear. They are those straight-topped pieces which Madame slips inside her blouse or bodice to give the new line. They are of sheer and snowy white stuffs, like mull or organdie, those new modesty pieces, and are finely tucked or lace-trimmed.

Though she may choose the quietest color for her new spring tailleur, she brightens that same suit by a very gay lining of soft flowered silk or crepe, and then adds a piquant touch by slipping in a gay vest of gorgeous brocade or gleaming satin in a bright color.

Minard's Liniment Cures Dandruff.

German Subterfuge.

The Almanach de Gotha, annually "made in Germany," was well known before the war as the social register of Europe, a kind of "Burke's Peerage" of the continent. Naturally it has been ostracized for some time from the best allied society, and now it is entirely superseded by the Almanach de Bruxelles, which, in a first edition, has recently met a warm welcome in France. The German publication, it appears, has been a powerful channel of espionage. Officials of every country in the world have innocently supplied it with information about prominent people, family trees, armies, navies, and what not. Some of this information was ostentatiously paraded on the pages of the Almanach, but one would like to know how much of it went privately into the files of the German intelligence department.

HONEY CAKE.

Here's Something Pretty Good for Sweet-Tooth People.

Three-quarters cup of honey, half cup sugar, 2½ cups flour, 1 egg, ½ teaspoon ginger, 1 teaspoon cinnamon, ½ teaspoon ground cardamon see, ½ teaspoon cloves, speck white pepper, speck of salt, ½ teaspoon soda, 1 tablespoon water, 2 ounces blanched almonds cut into small pieces or chopped. Sift together the flour and spices, dissolve the soda in the water, beat the egg, and combine all the ingredients. Beat or knead the mixture thoroughly. Cook a small sample. If it does not rise sufficiently, add a little more soda and honey; if it falls, add a little more flour. Roll out the dough to the thickness of about three-fourths of an inch and bake in a hot oven. When the cake is done, glaze it with a thick sirup of sugar and water, and allow it to dry in a slow oven or in some other warm place. While it is still warm cut it into long strips, or it may be left in one large cake to be cut into thin slices when served. This cake will become very hard on cooling and will not be soft enough to eat for several weeks, but keep in good condition for an indefinite length of time.

Goat Meat Good Human Food.

The goat is said to be the cleanest feeder of the live stock world. It will not eat straw or hay that has been under foot. It nibbles the choicest bits of foliage and rejects all uncleanness. Its meat, therefore, is equally fit for human food with the flesh of the sheep. Present prices of goats for the range are well up to the prevailing figure for sheep.

Over Canadian Battlefields

The Abomination of Desolation.

(J. W. Dafoe in Winnipeg Free Press.)

The storming of Vimy Ridge on that wintry April morning two years ago was neither in its actual achievement nor in its military consequences the greatest feat of the Canadian Expeditionary Force; but it holds, and it may continue to hold, a unique place in the Canadian consciousness. It was the first clean-cut definite stroke by the Canadian Corps acting as a recognized unit of the greater British army; and there was in the achievement something dramatic and climateric which riveted the attention of all watchers of the long-continuing duel between the great armies along the western front. For Vimy Ridge, before it had any Canadian associations, was a tragic name! It was the western-most bastion of German power in Europe. Against its gently rising slopes the fierce French valor that had conquered the valley of the Souchez and its bordering uplands, had dashed itself in vain; the hillside was white with the unburied bones of the men who won the ridge in October, 1915, for a day, only to be swept back by a German counter-attack of overwhelming force. The Germans proudly boasted the impregnability of a position which protected their strangle-hold upon the coalfields of Lens and gave them a jumping-off place for a futher adventure westward to the Channel ports. When the greater portion of the Ridge was stormed in a fierce sustained assault by the Canadian troops on the morning of April 9, 1917, the reverberation of the achievement went round the world; and its echoes will long persist.

Vimy Ridge—a swell of land five miles in length which rises so gradually on the southern slopes that one hardly realizes the elevation until he stands upon the crest and notes how the ground falls sheer away to the eastward—marks the eastern rim of one of the bloodiest battle-grounds of the whole war. Many Canadians have but the haziest knowledge of the battles that were fought hereabouts in the early summer of 1915; but the flower of the highly trained armies with which France and Germany entered the war lie buried here.

When, after the German defeat on the Marne in September, 1914, and the check to the Allies on the Aisne, the race to the northern sea began with the Germans keeping a step in advance and thus blocking the constant French attempt to outflank them from the west, all the high ground in this region was occupied by the Germans; and when the fronts became rigid the French found themselves in a dangerously insecure position with the German possession of the high hill of Notre Dame de Lorette threatening all the coal fields of northern France and the southern shore of the Channel. During the winter of 1914-15 the French organized their attack, and in the early summer they set themselves doggedly to the task of turning the Germans out of these strong places. The enemy held the towering hill of Notre Dame and the cluster of houses known as Ablain St. Nazaire at its foot; across the little Souchez river the village of Carency on a slight eminence, a mile or so to the south the hamlet of Neuville St. Vaast, on the crest of a swell in the ground, southward from the latter point and stretching eastward almost to the base of Vimy Ridge they had prepared a huge network and maze of trenches and redoubts which acquired a sinister renown under the name of the Labyrinth.

For weeks during the summer of 1915 the battle raged here continuously; and literally the French drove the Germans foot by foot and yard by yard from these positions; out of Carency and down the Souchez valley; back step by step from the heights of Notre Dame; trench by trench the Labyrinth was wrested from them; and by the late summer the Germans had withdrawn behind the great ridge of Vimy which lay athwart the path of the advancing French. There they stood savagely at bay, and when the French, in unison with the British attack at Loos, north of Lens, essayed in October to storm the hill, they exacted a bloody revenge for their earlier defeats. Afterwards this area became part of the British front, when the French moved to the south bank of the Somme; and after a year of inactivity, varied by a single unsuccessful attack upon a portion of the ridge's defences by a British brigade, the Canadians, in the winter of 1916-17, took over this sector and set themselves the task of taking the Ridge as their initial contribution to the great spring offensive that was foreshadowed.

I stood almost in the centre of this huge battlefield in the closing hours of a sombre March day; a light mist was shrouding the crests of the uplands; in the valleys the darkness of night was already falling; for fleeting moments the dying sun, through a breach in the cloud battlements, threw gleams of wintry sunshine over the scene. Nearby were the abandoned ruins of what was once the hamlet of Carency. To the right Vimy Ridge rose slowly to the sky line, flaring up in its northern ends into the steeper slopes of "The Pimple." Next came a narrow valley; and then the ridge resumed, turning now almost due west and rising to the height of Notre Dame de Lorette that dominated the landscape. At the base of the sloping terraces, that came down from the hill-top the little River Souchez ran, turning northeasterly through the gorge and onward towards Lens. This little stream has known its current dammed by the wedged bodies of dead men; its banks have brimmed with human blood. Beyond the stream at the foot of the hill were the ruins of Ablain St. Nazaire; and nearby all that remained of the sugar factory about which raged a Homeric struggle, noted in the battle bulletins of those days. Up those slopes, now so still in the fading daylight, the French pushed their way day by day and week by week until they planted their flag on its crest. To the south and east they fought their way over Neuville St. Vaast and through the tangled mazes of the Labyrinth. Within a radius of three miles from the place upon which we stood, over one hundred thousand French soldiers who fell in six months' fighting in 1915 lie buried. These incredible figures were vouched for by an officer of high rank.

When the Canadians moved into this area in the winter of 1916-17 they made their homes amidst the wreckage of these battlefields. They took over the trenches along the lower slopes of Vimy Ridge which were reachable only by communication trenches and sunken roads over open ground in plain view in daylight of the Germans who held the crest of the ridge and its western slopes half-way down.

Behind this active front they built their secondary positions on the battlegrounds of 1915. Thus the First Division was encamped upon the ground of the Labyrinth; the divisional headquarters were in a German dugout thirty-nine steps downward from the surface. The reshifting of trenches and dug-outs in this neighborhood was not, the Canadians found, to be lightly attempted; for the place was one huge—if unmarked—cemetery where French and Germans by the thousand had been buried where they fell.

Over this area for a distance of miles the Canadian corps had planted its camps as the line moved forward in front. Along the roads which cross in all directions one could read the sign-posts of the regiments pointing the way to collections of Nissen huts and smaller wooden structures. Here, too, were defensive trenches and strong redoubts prepared for the reception of the enemy in the event of a German advance. One could easily imagine how busy this scene had been in the summer and autumn of 1917 when the Canadian corps were encamped hereabouts. But on the March evening when I saw it, it was bleak and cheerless beyond the power of words to express. The tide of war had flowed past and left the wrecked countryside vacant—the huts empty and the camps abandoned save for, here and there, a handful of men engaged in salvage work; the roadways, once swarming with life, deserted and silent! Over all desolation and loneliness rested like a pall; everywhere the wreckage of battle, the debris of destruction; everywhere the scene of man's mortality! A grim and melancholy expanse; yet withal holy ground for here men by the tens of thousands died for mankind!

A RICH PRIZE.

The Caspian Oil Fields Are Very Valuable.

There have been several reports of battles in Baku, and recently an account was published of the setting fire to Baku oil wells by Turkish troops, and the statements that this action adds another complication to diplomatic problems in the Caucasus.

A few years ago William Eleroy Curtis published a book, entitled "Around the Black Sea." Mr. Curtis did not confine his story to the Black Sea, but writes of the whole region. The following paragraphs with reference to the oil wells and the development of the country as it was six or eight years ago are of interest:

"Petroleum has been known in the foothills and along the (Caspian) sea coast at the eastern extremity of the Caucasus Mountains from the earliest times.

"There is a railway on each side of the Caucasus Mountains. That on the northern side runs from Baku, the oil centre, to the city of Rostov, at the mouth of the River Don and the head of the Sea of Azov. That on the south runs from Batoum on the Black Sea to Baku, and is the principal thoroughfare for the shipment of oil to other parts of Europe than Russia. The annual shipments of refined petroleum from Batoum to the rest of the world have averaged about 1,000,000 barrels, but the Russian refiners cannot compete with the Standard Oil Co., either in the quality or the price of their product. Russian oil has practically been driven out of all the European countries except Turkey, Roumania, Hungary and Russia, and the Standard Oil Company is now 'the light of Asia,' without a rival flame.

"After leaving Tiflis we were passing through a beautiful and highly cultivated agricultural country. When we awoke in the morning we were in a desert, and everything smelled of oil. The first thing I saw, looking out of the car window, was a long caravan of camels, loaded with cans of refined petroleum, plodding through the sands on the shores of the Caspian Sea.

In ancient times, for thousands of years—no one knows how long—the Persians used to come up to the shore of the Caspian Sea, where the city of Baku now stands, and scrape from the ground the seepage from the springs of oil that were found near the water. They used these scrapings for lubricating purposes, for fuel, for light, for healing wounds, and for various other useful purposes, and exercised much ingenuity in cleaning and applying them.

"At some remote date — it may have been as far back as the time of Daniel the Prophet—the fire worshippers, the followers of Zoroaster, found here several oil springs on fire. The naptha must have caught fire by accident, but they considered it a miracle, and through many centuries, made pilgrimages to worship and adore the flames. Ultimately they built a temple, a square structure of brick, with a dome and four chimneys, through which, in some ingenious manner, they conducted the natural gas which exhales from the naptha springs, and thus were able to maintain four bright flames.

"The development of the petroleum industry was very slow and began late. The inhabitants of the old Persian city of Baku utilized the oil for light and fuel gas undisturbed until 1856, when a Russian named Kokreff, and an Armenian named Mirsoeff, obtained a concession from the Russian Government to operate wells and to refine the product. The specific gravity of the Baku oil is said to be much lighter than that of the American oil. It has a naphtha basis, while the American oil has a parraffin base. The oil is more like that of California. It is better for fuel than for illuminating purposes, and is used for steaming on railways, and steamships in this part of the empire."

For Dodd's Kidney Pills Have Made Him Well.

A Year of Growing Kidney Trouble Brought Bright's Disease, but He Found a Help in Dodd's Kidney Pills.

Belleville, Yarmouth Co., N. S., April 21. — (Special):— "You can tell everyone that it was Dodd's Kidney Pills that made me well." This is the joyful remark of Mr. Alcide Meuse, a well-known and highly-respected resident of this place. Mr. Meuse, who suffered for a year from kidney trouble, is enthusiastic in his praises of Dodd's Kidney Pills. "I think everybody ought to use them all the time," he says. Then he gives the reasons for his enthusiasm:

"I first caught a cold," Mr. Meuse states, "and kidney trouble followed. My sleep was broken, my eyes were puffed and swollen and I had dark circles around them. I was often dizzy and always thirsty. My skin itched and burned at night. I was troubled with nervousness and my limbs were swollen.

"I had cramps in my muscles, backache and headache. Then Bright's Disease developed. A doctor attended me but the first real relief I got was from Dodd's Kidney Pills. I took eight boxes of them and they cured me."

All of Mr. Meuse's troubles came from sick kidneys. Dodd's Kidney Pills cured his kidneys and he felt well all over. That's why he's enthusiastic. For sound kidneys make pure blood and pure blood is the foundation of health.

A SOLDIER'S GRAVE.

They laid him away in the orchard; that is all that we'll ever know,
That's all that his comrades told us an'
I'm kind of glad it's so—
I'm glad that we don't remember the battle an' wound an' pain,
But only the grave in the orchard grass
That waves in the blossom rain.

"We laid him away in the orchard," was all that his comrades said;
Nor give us that set to sorrow or mourn for our soldier dead,
But only the pain of partin', the thoughts of his far-off mound,
An' him with his hands crossed—that-away—
An' the Old Flag wrapped around.

They laid him away in the orchard; that's mebbe the reason why
I like to sit in the gloamin' in the orchard here an' try
To picture him a-sleepin' in the orchard there, the sound
Of drums and bugles an' war forgot,
An' the pink blossom all around.

That's why, when it's Decoration an' the vets tromp up an' down,
I ruther stay with my feelin's an' never go off to town.
To dream of the place he's sleepin', the grave 'neath the flowered limb,
Where every day that the blossoms fall,
It's Memorial Day for him!

Orient Ways Queer to Us

Mohammedanism is as much a social system as a religion. The mosque is no more like a church than it is like a clubhouse. People do not consider it improper to eat or sleep in it, to discuss secular matters, or to read books or newspapers. It serves as a refuge for homeless strangers and as a meeting place for the folk of the town.

Sometimes the mosque sees even stranger sights. In this relation an American tells of a curious incident.

On the last day of Ramadan, or the period of fasting, a tumult arose in the town where he was stopping. It might have had a serious consequence, though the cause of the disturbance was absurdly trivial.

A man who belonged to the heretical Wahabi sect was in the mosque while some persons were visiting the tomb of a prophet who is supposed to be buried there. These visitations consist in standing in front of the vault and reciting a long salutation. By the Wahabis they are held to be idolatrous.

This man started to declaim against the custom and attracted a considerable audience, one of whom, a Meccan Arab, a learned man, put an end to the sermon by hitting the preacher on the head. The governor of the city, who happened to be in the mosque at the time, observed these indecorous proceedings and ordered the arrest of the Arab without troubling to make inquiries.

Nothing further happened until evening, when a crowd began to gather in front of the Government offices and demanded that the prisoner be released. When the crowd began to assemble the American was under the impression that they had seen the new moon, which marks the end of the fast and is always an occasion for rejoicing.

He at once sallied forth to see what might be going on, and so got mixed up with the crowd just as the row began. The mob broke open the door and rushed into the building, from the balcony of which a strong lunged orator addressed them.

The arrival of several companies of infantry put an end to his speech; the soldiers retook the building and drove the intruders out. Re-enforcements coming up charged the crowd. The people retaliated with sticks, stones and anything else that came handy. Several were injured, but non seriously.

The troops threatened to fire, but fortunately for the crowd did not do so. At midnight, the whole place being in an uproar, the Governor gave way and released the prisoner, who was carried home in triumph and amid general enthusiasm. The American had been rather roughly handled during the scuffle, in which he could not avoid taking part.

Type printing is unpopular in Persia. The straightness of the lines offends the Persian's artistic sense, and he feels that in printed books the character of the letters is entirely lost.

Persia is to-day largely dependent upon lithography for its own production of books. Naturally these are very scarce. At the beginning of the nineteenth century a press with movable types was set up in Tabriz, and a certain number of books was printed. The effort met with no encouragement, however, and had shortly to be abandoned.

The same taste which makes a Persian esteem so highly the great calligraphists makes him deplore the absence of character in a type printed book. What delights him most in this relation is a well written manuscript, and he takes the same delight in the copyist's work that we take in the touch of an old master. Failing this, he contents himself with a lithograph, which is usually a facsimile of the writing of some fairly good scribe and has, at any rate, a human element in it.

It is hard for us to credit the vast amount of attention that is paid to caligraphy in the East, where men of learning devote years to its acquirement and their best days to making artistic copies of classical works. Although this art is to a certain extent dying out owing to the cheapening of lithography, a man may even yet in Persia become as famous for his writing as a poet is for his verses.

A curious contrast is thus presented by the Persians, who cling to written books, while elsewhere in the East there is a rapid spread of type printed books, printing, bookselling and journalism in the Orient in the last twenty years or so having developed to a comparatively high degree. Both Cairo and Constantinople possess excellent printing presses, which turn out numberless books and journals.

An odd form of gambling has developed in India, for which the New York cotton market is indirectly responsible. Five quotations from the New York market are cabled to India every day, and the natives conceived this to be a direct invitation to them to establish a simple but none the less absorbing form of gambling.

The gambling consists in guessing what the five figures would amount to and the persons most nearly approximating the right amount wins. So fascinating did this game prove that the authorities became greatly worried over the indulgence of the poorer class of natives in it. Efforts have been made to lessen it, and it is believed that at last some success has been attained by those who are unwilling that the poorer people should squander their scanty funds in this pastime.

CHASING THE RAINBOW.

Curious Legends That Are Told in Different Countries.

We have all of us heard stories of the treasure at the end of the rainbow. There is a pot of gold there, you know. And if we could only walk far enough, we might find it and be ever thereafter happy.

That is what our nurses tell us when we are children, isn't it?

And sometimes we learn that the rainbow is a bridge, and the thunder is the roar of the heavy wheels going over it.

These are the stories that we hear in childhood about the rainbow. Children of other lands hear many other stories.

In Greece nurses tell the children that if anyone by chance stumbles over the end of the rainbow his or her sex is changed. A fine story that to tell a child! The little Greeks must run away from the end of the rainbow instead of seeking there to find our pot of gold.

The little Turk hears from his nurse that if he can but touch the band of orange that spans the heavens in the rainbow his head will turn to silver, with rubies for eyes and teeth of gold.

In many parts of Russia the rainbow is called a pump, and in Hungary it is called "God's pump" and "Noah's pump."

In Russia, in some provinces, the wells are covered with strong platforms, so that the water cannot be drawn from them by the rainbow, and in other provinces it is said that three angels have charge of the rainbow—one to draw water through it from the earth, another to give water from it to the clouds and another to return the water to the earth in the form of rain.—Boston Herald.

Dandelions a Good Food

Dandelions are a nuisance in the lawn, and the spring of the year is a good time to cut them out. Just at this time dandelions are tender and make good food, so the lawn is benefited by cutting them out, the food bill is somewhat reduced by serving them on the table. Dandelions have qualities that might be called semi-medicinal, making them a particularly desirable food to serve at this season.

A balanced meal is generally supposed to be one containing protein, fat and carbohydrate in right proportion, but experiments and experience show that the body requires certain foodstuffs that furnish it with building material and help to regulate its processes; in other words, the body must be supplied with ash constituents or mineral matter.

It has long been known that iron is necessary to maintain the body in a state of health, and that it is furnished in such food as eggs, legumes, cereals, fruits, vegetables and meats. As sources of iron, the green vegetables are the most important of all foods. It is commonly known that spinach contains a relatively large proportion of iron, but it is not generally recognized that dandelions are also of value in this respect.

Iron in foods is used to much better advantage than in medicinal iron, and furthermore, when medicinal iron is prescribed its effect is increased by the presence of an abundance of food iron.

In proportion to the cost fruit and vegetables have been found to furnish much more iron than do meats and fish, and the iron of vegetables is more completely available for nutrition than is the iron of meats. Since tonics are expensive and dandelions may be had for the cutting, it is poor economy to hold to the tradition in many households of giving the children a spring tonic to keep their blood in good condition.

The liberal use of fruits and vegetables is to be recommended for women and children especially, because for proper maintenance and growth they require more food iron in proportion to their food requirements than do men.

Dandelions, like other green vegetables, have a mild laxative tendency, due largely to their roughage, a term applied to the substance that is not affected by the digestive juices. These bulky foods are desirable in any good diet as aids to preventing putrefaction in the lower part of the intestinal tract.

Near the surface of the ground the dandelion root is topped by a crown from which the leaves radiate. The flavor of this crown is exceedingly good, somewhat resembling asparagus. Even if the leaves are old, the crown is good. Therefore when dandelion greens are gathered they should be cut and not pulled, in order that the crown may be obtained.

The imperfect outside leaves should be discarded at the time of gathering, because they are generally tougher than the others, and there can be no uniformity in the cooking if they are allowed to remain.

Dandelion greens should be plunged in a deep pan of cold water and rubbed thoroughly between the hands. If the leaves are to be used fresh and uncut as salad, care should be used to prevent breaking them. Lift from the water and repeat in fresh water, three times, drain and wrap in a damp cloth if they are not to be used immediately.

For cooking it is best to flavor dandelions. Put the leaves in a large piece of cheesecloth, plunge them into boiling water and let them boil for five minutes. They should then be removed, plunged into cold water and drained. They should be cut or chopped, placed in a kettle, covered with boiling water and allowed to cook until they are tender, generally from ten to fifteen minutes.

A Quick Relief for Headache

A headache is frequently caused by badly digested food; the gases and acids resulting therefrom are absorbed by the blood which in turn irritates the nerves and causes painful symptoms called headache, neuralgia, rheumatism, etc. 15 to 30 drops of Mother Seigel's Syrup will correct faulty digestion and afford relief.

Our Lopsided Bodies.

"I venture to assert that if you measure the legs of every one in this court you will not find a person who has a pair of equal length," said Dr. C. W. Cooke in giving evidence in a London court.

"The human body is not symmetrical, as is commonly believed," said a widely known doctor. "The legs vary in length and circumference, and the arms as well. The right hand is usually bigger than the left, because it is used more. The head is by no means regular in form—in fact it is often as not lopsided.

"The left leg is generally a little longer than the right, presumably to counteract the overbalancing effect on the body of the right arm, which is usually somewhat heavier and longer than the left, since ninety-five out of every hundred people use their right arm more than their left. The eyes, too, are nearly always different, both in shape and strength, and through sleeping more on one side than another every man's ears are tilted at different angles. Feet, too, are nearly always unlike in shape, due frequently to the wearing of ill-fitting boots.—London Mirror.

THE WAR'S OVER.

But This Pound Cake is Good Just the Same.

The fact that it no longer be-Hoovers us to save sugar does not make Mrs. Brand Whitlock's war pound-cake any the less a delicious addition to our dainties. To quote Mrs. Whitlock: "This cake made without butter, eggs or milk, has become immensely popular throughout France, where economy is either a necessity or a self-imposed obligation," and is a shining example of how far skilled cookery can go to mitigate frugality of ingredients. Below is Mrs. Whitlock's recipe:

1 cupful brown sugar.
1 tablespoonfuls lard, or ½ Crisco and ½ oil.
1 cupful hot water.
1 package seedless raisins, cut once.
1 teaspoonful each of salt, cloves and cinnamon.

Boil these ingredients five minutes after they begin to bubble. When cold add one teaspoon of soda, dissolved in 1 teaspoonful of hot water and three cups sifted flour. Bake in two loaves 45 minutes in a slow oven.

In the spring when you're "all in"—fagged out—blood thin, if you will turn to Nature's remedy, a tonic made from wild roots and barks, which has stood fifty years as the best spring tonic—you will find strength regained. No need to tell you it's Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, put up in tablet or liquid form, and sold by every druggist in the land. After a hard winter—shut up indoors, your blood needs a temperance tonic, a tissue-builder and blood-maker such as this "Medical Discovery" of Dr. Pierce's.

Stratford, Ont.—"I can highly recommend Doctor Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and Pleasant Pellets. I have used these remedies twenty-five years in my family. Had a very bad case of neuralgia and 'Golden Medical Discovery' completely cured me in a very short time. I have given it to all my family, also to my grand children. I had a grand-child last summer that we thought could not live. We gave him the 'Discovery' and he is strong and healthy as any child could be. I am a great believer in Doctor Pierce's Medicines and would not be without them."—Mrs. A. Bowling, 23 Railway Ave.

A Canadian Homestead

The typical homestead of the Canadian prairie is open to the four winds of heaven. It is possible there is a road leading to it, but one should not rely upon that. The ocular evidences of a thoroughfare are not everything to this great, level land. It would be safer to accept the friendly guid of a compass than to be deluded by the path which, now beaten, now dim, here wide and there merging into the plowed furrows of the "fields," may bob up again by a swamp, or else disappear altogether in the tender haze of the horizon line. The homestead can be seen miles away, a fixed though minute point; the "road," on the other hand, makes no pretense to constancy of permanency.

The homesteader who built the house on the treeless, virgin prairie, or who intends to build one, usually hires himself out to an established farmer in a kind of preliminary apprenticeship. This hiring is one of the essential steps in developing his qualifications. He has to get his hand in, to increase his wherewithal, to acquire the practical knowledge requisite for working his land. As a "homesteader," he has secured a tract of unappropriated land not exceeding 160 acres, on condition of settlement, cultivation and continuous occupancy as a home by him for a definite period, and the payment of certain sums. His initial task is to "break" the prairie, so that the soil can be penetrated alike by sun and frost and transferred into a light friable mould. So one day, fortified by the hard experience which has helped him to adapt himself to his primitive environment, he gathers to himself some household goods, and probably accompanied and assisted by a wife, treks from the one spot on the lonely prairie which henceforth, for some years, is destined to be his promised land. His other possessions, of the portable kind, have the same practical character, to say the least. He must have a wagon and a pair of oxen or horses, and on to the wagon he loads the greater part of his future home and what is to go therewith. A more incongruous "load" could hardly be imagined. Stovepipes may protrude from the midst of bedding, baskets and lanterns cling like barnacles to the strange-looking "craft." The walls and roof of the new house may be slung, by means of lashings, to the sides just above the springs, while the lowly domestic broom probably sticks up at a rakish angle above the litter at the rear, as if symbolical of that temper which has made a clean and triumphant sweep of all the social encumbrances of the past. For a number of years the homesteader will be called upon to make a sacrifice of almost everything he holds dear, for the sake of this great adventure. The teeming world, the humble fireside, kith and kin, known and loved ways, have been left behind, that he may win his birthright to the soil and gain what, after all, must at times seem to him like a phantom freedom.

A few weeks later his first crude home has arisen on the prairie. There is no architecture to speak of. The shelter is little more than a door and a window with some clapboards arranged rectangularly around them. Owing to the race with time and the hurry to conquer the earth, the ends of the clapboards are not sawed off. The stovepipe now stands like a flagless pole above the humble wooden roof. Water barrels and sacks are littered about. There is a grinding wheel and a bench. Probably there is a tent to relieve the solitude of the shack. There may be a hencoop and a woodpile. A trail, newly made, may run left and right from the lowly threshold and lose itself in the interest to the progressive, and up to field. But plowed furrows are sure to be everywhere, to come up to the door and almost touch it, for nothing must run to waste. Where everything, the man, his cattle, his wife, must yield of their utmost, there is no room for such trivolities as yards and gardens, or hedges, or flowers, or lanes and trees. Is not the railroad only two hours' ride away, the schoolhouse a short twenty miles distant, the big town of the prairies a scant day's journey?

It will, of course, be two years before the first crop is garnered, another year, perhaps, before the first rude shanty, with some improvements, will give place to the comfortable farmhouse with its barn, machine shed, granaries, pig pens and, luxury of luxuries, the telephone! And another five years after that? The homesteader rests for a moment over his plow as he pictures in his mind's eye the coming town with stores and churches, the paved road and the political caucus, his election to a seat in the Local Legislature and, it may be, his final return to the beloved beaten ways of life which he left when he set out in search of the heritage of the prairie.

The indications of worms are restlessness, grinding of the teeth, picking of the nose, extreme peevishness, often convulsions. Under these conditions conditions the best remedy that can be got is Miller's Worm Powders. They will attack the worms as soon as administered and will grind them to atoms that pass away in the evacuations. The little sufferer will be immediately eased and a return of the attack will not be likely.

Elephant Most Useful.

Parrots are playful, but eagles are not, and no one has ever been able successfully to tame an eagle. Among sea mammals, seals are very playful, sea lions are not, and trained seals are among the cleverest performers of the vaudeville stage. Of the larger animals, the elephant alone possesses playful character in youth, and thus, while the rhinoceros and hippopotamus can only be seen from the safe side of strong barred cages, the elephant can be utilized for a thousand purposes, from that of a derrick to a nursemaid.

Beautiful New Flouncings.

Paris is to be thanked for them. They are quite wide, extremely new and rather expensive.

Some are done on fine black nets, others on pearl grey crepe Georgette, or Georgette in dark colors.

They have several rows of the new ostrich fringe—which, by the way, is not ostrich at all, but simply a silky fringe that looks like the feather fronds.

In addition to the rows of fringe they have great oval motifs of the fringe—the motifs far apart and very effective.

Such flouncings will really make very handsome new spring gowns, and will need no other trimming at all.

Strangled with Asthma is the only expression that seems to convey what is endured from an attack of this trouble. The relief from Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Asthma Remedy is beyond measure. Where all was suffering there comes comfort and rest. Breathing becomes normal and the bronchial tubes completely cleared. This unequalled remedy is worth many times its price to all who use it.

IVORY CARVING.

Wondrous Work of the Chinese Experts.

The beauty, peculiarity, delicacy, and depth of the Chinese carving in ivory, tortoise shell and sandalwood is known everywhere. The instrument used to carve card cases and ivory ornaments is a sort of minute chisel, flat or bevelled at the point; some of these tools have a projecting tooth at one side, enabling the workman to carve under the figures. It is because of this process that many of the figures appear to be carved over lacework; the extreme delicacy of this carving is exquisite, exhibiting to perfection the patient industry which is characteristic of the Chinese nation.

A MANDARIN'S BOAT.

An odd specimen of ivory carving was a mandarin boat about two feet in length, the width and height being in proportion; the boat was regularly fitted up in various compartments, representing cabins; in the largest one were couches and lanterns hanging from the roof. Before the cabin door was placed a table, around which were seated two mandarins and their wives, the latter having musical instruments in their hands; in other parts of the vessel were sailors working the boat, on the roof of which were placed flower jars and a couch whereon reclined a mandarin.

PERFECT COLOR WORK.

The figures, none exceeding an inch and a half in height, were clad in appropriate dresses, colored to represent the correct costume, the embroidery being delicately traced; the furniture in the cabins, lanterns, flower jars, and shrubs were also colored and depicted with great accuracy. It is impossible to convey an adequate idea of the perfection of this work.

The elaborately carved ivory balls the ingenuity with which they are constructed have long excited admiration and astonishment at the skill which can carve so many concentric balls one within the other.

The truth is that each ball is constructed of two pieces, the edges of which are finely scraped down, the edge of one sphere being made to overlap its counterpart with the greatest exactitude; thus each separate ball is enclosed one within the other. The joinings are then united by a particularly strong cement, aided by the employment of heat and pressure, and over each joining various devices are carved.

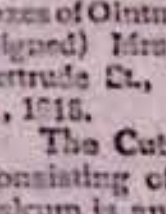

MYSTERIOUS DEVICE.

The most curious variety of these spheres is the ball having every appearance of being cut out of the solid mass, with perforated holes through which, in whatever direction it is turned, spikes of ivory protrude, though the surface is perfectly smooth and the weight such as to imply solidity, without any carving to conceal a joining. It is believed that the ball is manufactured in a manner similar to the carved ones. The carvings in tortoise shell and sandalwood are executed in the same masterly style.

The tools used for the purpose of engraving are extremely simple; the mother-of-pearl counter is placed in a hollow exactly the size of the article, and by this means it is kept in a steady position while undergoing the process of engraving. The finest specimens of engraving on mother-of-pearl, carvings in ivory, tortoise shell and sandalwood come from Canton, those being unsurpassed for beauty and delicacy of workmanship.

CUTICURA HEALS RASH ON CHILD

On Body and Face. Red and Itchy. Cried For Hours. Lasted a Year.

"A rash started all over my little girl's body, and she had some on her face. It started in a pimple that was full of water, and it got red and itchy. She cried for hours. This trouble lasted a year.

"Then I started with a free sample of Cuticura Soap and Ointment. I bought more, and I used four cakes of Soap and three boxes of Ointment which healed her." (Signed) Mrs. Dora Langly, [illegible] Gertrude St., Verdun, Que., August 11, 1918.

The Cuticura Toilet Trio Consisting of Soap, Ointment and Talcum is an indispensable adjunct of the daily toilet in maintaining skin purity and skin health.

For free sample each of Cuticura Soap, Ointment and Talcum address post-card: "Cuticura, Dept. A, Boston, U. S. A." Sold everywhere.

Package Goods Expensive.

That package goods are more expensive than goods bought in bulk is shown in a chart of comparative food values recently published. The chart shows that canned peaches cost three times as much as dried peaches, and the food value in calories is three times greater in the dried than in the canned variety. Canned pork and beans cost about twice as much per unit of food value as dried beans. The canned goods are ready for immediate use and the dried require preparation, but to persons interested in reducing the cost of living these facts are worth taking into consideration.

Attractive Decoration.

Gold and colored powders can be applied by pad and stencil process on thin fabrics so as to make attractive designs in the following way. Silk or cotton powder sprinkled on the table, and on it is laid the tissue, held in a frame or otherwise. A zinc stencil is laid on, then a mordant or other adhesive substance is applied, this being a paste made of rye flour, gelatine and other substances. The stencil is raised, then the fabric is lifted off the bed of powder. Gold powder, etc., is then sifted upon the surface, and it adheres to the stencil design, producing very attractive effects. Flowers or embroidery motifs; gold spangles, even of rather large size, can also be applied.

Corns Are Like Knots.

Year by year they grow harder and incidentally more painful. Why suffer when you can be cured for 25c spent on Putnam's Corn Extractor? Fifty years in use and guaranteed to cure. Use Putnam's Extractor, 25c at all dealers.

Piano Aids in Cleaning.

A Philadelphian has patented a dust-filtering attachment which will change a player piano into a vacuum cleaner. You need only to disconnect the air pipe leading from the piano bellows, from the air motor. Insert the attachment in this, have somebody work the pedals and proceed with your parlor cleaning.—Popular Science Monthly.

Dead Locusts Valuable.

Locusts are plentiful in Uruguay, and the farmers of that republic are compelled to keep up a constant war against them. Millions of these destructive insects are killed every year. Recently it was learned that soap, fertilizer and lubricating oil may be obtained from the dead locusts, and in the future they will be utilized for that purpose.—Popular Science Monthly.

Component Parts of Ocean.

About 3 1-2 per cent of mineral salts and 96 1-2 per cent fresh water make up the oceans. Three-fourths of the solid matter is common table salt, chlorine of sodium, other ingredients being chloride, sulphate and bromide of magnesium; sulphate and carbonate of lime and sulphate of potash, besides traces of various other minerals and metals, including gold and silver.

Thought Rules the World.

In the end thought rules the world. There are times when impulses are passions are more powerful, but they soon expend themselves; while mind, acting constantly, is ever ready to drive them back and work when their energy is exhausted.

All the Local News.

The air continues chilly.

Schools close at noon today for the annual holidays.

L. G. Crowell has bought a new car—a 1619 model.

The person too mean to subscribe for his local paper is always an object of pity and contempt.

The steamer Bedeque, stranded at Janvrin's Island last week, has been sold by J. C. Bourinot, underwriter's agent.

Hon. I. LeBlanc is again very seriously ill and new hope has been kindled in the breast of a D'Escousse politician who is after the job.

Thos. White, of Whiteside, was in town on Wednesday and gave the RECORD a call. He reported the farms as looking promising in his vicinity and seeding about over.

Mrs. (Dr.) A. W. Chisholm and children arrived from Margaree last week and are spending a few weeks with Mr. and Mrs. LeBrun. Mrs. Chisholm's many friends are pleased to see her.

The cost of living commissioner is laying a report before the Minister of Labor, which shows that the prices of textiles and staple articles of clothing should decline in the near future.

Don't grumble if your paper is not always flush up to the high standard of your ideal. Charitably remember that no editor is capable of getting up quite as good a paper as you could yourself.

There is a report that the Maritime Fish Co., of which Baptiste Ceretto is the local agent, have their eye on the Phelan property near the postoffice and that they are on the eve of purchasing it. It offers a first-class site for the establishment of a fish business.

Capt. S. Joyce, ex-M.P.P., got $900.00 out of the road monies last year, the RECORD was informed by a man from the country who visited our office a few days ago. This is a sample of how favorites are looked after as well as how the road monies are being frittered away.

What Richmond county needs more than anything else is a live spirit of optimism exercised on all occasions; greater faith in the natural potential wealth of the county; more up-to-date methods generally in the prosecution of the farming industry; less political animus and more unity in all things that tend to uplift and develop.

D. J. Fergusen, the genial Supt. of the Richmond County Asylum, was in town on Friday and gave the RECORD a friendly and business call. Mr. Ferguson is a highly regarded citizen of St. Peters, a most efficiet supervisor of our local asylum and a man with whom it is a pleasure to come in contact.

Prof. Porter, of McGill University, Montreal, who is summering at Guysboro in his villa on the outskirts o2 that charming spot, was in town this week in his auto, accompanied by a party of friends Prof. Porter is a fine, unassuming old gentleman.

The collector of customs has been advised by the commissioner of customs that all entries, starting with June 6th, must be accepted subject to amendment in view of the various changes in the tariff which will result from the new budget. Entries will therefore be put through and duty paid according to the old rate, any difference caused by the new tariff to be adjusted as soon as the scale is published.

Among the more important changes made in the Motor Vehicles Act at the last session of the Legislature are those increasing the chauffeur's fees and requiring registered chauffeurs to pass an examination before receiving their permits, increasing the provincial speed-limit from 20 to 25 miles an hour, and giving the right-of-way at a crossroads to the driver who approaches on the right hand of the other driver except on hills which rise more than five feet in one hundred, in which case the motorist ascending or descending the hill has the right-of-way.

Misses Minnie MacDonald and Mary McIntyre, Kempt Road, were in town yesterday.

No power on earth can make a man do wrong without his own consent.

Gerald LeBrun, who was attending school in Halifax, is home spending the holidays.

The farms look promising and mother earth will yield an abundant crop at harvest time.

Sorrows humanize our race. Tears are the showers that fertilize this world.

Schr. Stella, Gerrior, is in port discharging a cargo of eastern coal for Capt. Terrio.

Courtesy is a coin of which we cannot have too much; with which we can never afford to be stingy.

The local telephone line is being re-wired to Grandique and D'Escousse, the work being in charge of Jos. Babineau.

Mr. and Mrs. Tuttle, in their cargo, motored to the eastern part of the county on Sunday. Mrs. Binet and Mrs. Malzard accompanied them.

Easterly wind and a heavy tide prevented our fishermen from attending their trawls on Wednesday.

Two mainland N. S. T. A. offenders, tried before Stipendiary Campbell at St. Peters on Tuesday, were each fined $100.00 and costs.

Chas. Herbin, who has been attending St. Ann's College, Church Point, having obtained his B. A., has arrived home to spend the holidays.

Mr. and Mrs. Reynolds were in town on Sunday in their car from Port Hawkesbury. Returning in the afternoon, they were accompanied by Miss Kdtie Sutherland, clerk in Bourinot's up to-date store in that town.

The Red Cross entertained our returned soldiers to a dance in the hall on Tuesday evening. Refreshments were served and music enlivened the occasion.

Rev. Mr. Colclough (Gokely) and family are now occupying the rectory, which has been renovated throughout. A little paint to the exterior would improve the appearance of the edifice as well as preserve it

Messrs. Robert Martell and John A. Landry, two of Petit de Grat's most enterprising and popular business men, have bought large quantities of fish this season, and are leaders in their line.

Haddock and mackerel have been fairly plentiful the past week. Some of the fishermen are realizing good money and others, though not doing so well, have much to encourage them, even if the price does not make them unduly optimistic.

You will notice by George J. Andrew's advertisement in today's issue that he is offering real bargains in ladies' and gentlemen's boots and sandals. This is only one of the many lines he is overstocked on and anyone looking for real snaps should examine his large stock before buying elsewhere. It is too large and must be reduced and bargains can be expected.—12-13

THE GAME OF LIFE.

Life is a game, a struggle,
A frolic, as Fate decrees,
And the only way to meet it
Is with stiffened spine and knees.
Yield, if you must, for sorrow,
Give patience her timely due,
But keep your head uplifted,
No matter what else you do!

Friends may be true or faithless,
Sunshine may fail or stay,
Grief, like a shadow, lingers,
Happiness fades away.
Fortune may frown or flicker,
Her smile may be hard to woo;
But keep your head uplifted,
No matter what you do!

So shall you conquer always
So, though the way be long,
Shall you win success worth having,
Heart cheery and spirit strong.
Obstacles? Gaily scale them!
Trouble? Why, just wade through!
But keep your head uplifted,
No matter what else you do!
