RANDOM SHOTS

BY HERB STROUD

Almost everybody has heard of Radar but I find few people really know what it is all about. So I dug into the matter and came up with these facts that may help and interest you.

The word itself is a contraction of "radio detecting and ranging", the development of Radar has a long story. It has not been a quick evolution. Its basic principle is as old as Radio itself but it was not harnessed until the last war when Nations were seeking a device that would offset the military advantage of the aeroplane, the submarine and other weapons of modern warfare.

Helnrich Hertz demonstrated as far back as 1888 that electromagnetic waves can be reflected. Nikola Telsa in June 1900 said "That communication without wires to any point of the globe is practical. I proved it with absolute certitude through a discovery I made. In popular language, it is this "When we raise the voice and hear an echo in reply, we know that the sound of the voice must have reached a distant wall or boundary and must have been reflected from the same.

This same effect is produced electrically by what the scientists call "Stationary Waves". By their use we may produce at will from a sending station an electrical effect by which we may determine the relative position or course of a moving object, such as a vessel at sea, the distance traversed by the same, or its speed.

The famous Marconi also envisaged the possibility of using the radio "echo" to locate ships and other objects during poor visibility conditions.

Devices on Which Radar Depends

Research men found that the shorter the wave, the easier it is to focus a radio beam. Measurement of short distances with directed beams, known as Radar, was forced to await the development of electronic devices which could develop power and receiver sensitively at suitable radio frequencies and other apparatus capable of measuring split second time intervals. The development of new radio tubes capable of generating ultra short waves, made the building of radar beam apparatus become practical.

By 1937 this equipment was developed sufficiently to determine distances with considerable accuracy.

Radar became one of the greatest weapons of defence. During World War II it was credited with saving England during the terrible air attacks of 1940-41. Radar warned the British of enemy planes approach and could spot them during night raids.

The Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor was spotted by Private Joseph L. Lockhard. He reported his observation to his superior officer, who, knowing a number of American planes were due, took no action and the devastation of Pearl Harbor and hundreds of lives were lost almost the entire American navy was destroyed. Radar had done its duty but human failure created a debacle.

How Radar Operates

Radar assumes various forms, depending upon the specific purpose. In any form it is highly technical and intricate. Most Radar units consist of four basic elements--a microwave transmitter, a sensitive receiver, a cathode ray tube indicator and a direction antenna system, all working in exact synchronization. The pulses of radio energy strike a object and are reflected. The receiver picks up the returning signals and impresses them on the cathode-ray tube. At the same instant that the pulses leave the transmitter the cathode-ray tube starts to trace a horizontal line across the calibrated viewing chart. And this at the astonishing rate of 186,000 miles per second.

Uses of Radar

The principles of the radio locator have found numberless peacetime uses.

It has eliminated a large part of the hazards of marine navigation., such as the Radar location of icebergs, derelicts or others vessels invisible to the pilot. With its use big luxury liners can ignore heavy fogs that forced them to remain outside harbors for hours. They can now proceed at normal speed to their docks. With Radar's use the halt in plane traffic because of low visibility has been largely overcome. Radar reveals all objects in a plane path. The air borne beam pierces fog, murk, darkness. Planes can take off and land no matter what the weather. These uses are only a hint of the applications the world will find for this device. What a wonderful little being is man. His soft, perishable body is subject to all sorts of danger that can easily extinguish his life but his brains have produced many wonders to protect him. What a marvelous world in which we live and thrive. Maybe there is a better world but I for one am in no hurry to get there.

Miss Katie Ann Samson has returned to L'Ardoise after being a patient in the Hospital. She will spent the remainder of the winter with Mrs. James Monbourquette.

Mrs. Bertha Carter is visiting her sister, Mrs. Mable Pottie at River Bourgeois.

The many friends of Mr. Delphis Landry will be glad to know that he has purchased the property of Mr. Aimable Pottie. We wish them happiness in their new home.

Mr. Aimable Pottie has built himself a new home at Church Point and it will be known as "The House by the Side of the Road". Mr. Pottie who has been a cook and stewart most of his life on boats, trains and restaurants has retired and is enjoying his old age in his new home. This quiet spot is known as the first place that a Catholic Church was built in River Bourgeois and it was constructed of logs.

We wish Mr. Pottie much happiness in his retirement.

Hon. R. H. Winters Reports From Ottawa

January 30, 1954.

Lear Mr. Editor:

The Senate resumed after the Christmas recess and both houses of Parliament are now in full swing. Each succeeding week while Parliament is sitting seems to be busier than the preceding one, and during the one just past we covered a considerable amount of work.

In addition to Parliamentary activity, we have had the District Engineers and the District Architects of the Department of Public Works from all across Canada here at Ottawa for a full week of discussion. These key people have not met together since 1932, and I considered that it would be in the interests of efficiency and cohesion within the department if they were brought together to give them an oppertunity of examining their own problems in the light of these being encountered elsewhere, and, at the same time, bringing our officials here at Ottawa closer to the problems of the districts.

In Parliament two days of the week were devoted to the housing debate, which was concluded Thursday evening. We spent one day debating an increase in the indemnities for Members and an increase in the salaries of the Prime Minister, Ministers, the leader of the Opposition, and one or two other Parliamentary officials.

It is always pleasant to do things for other people than for oneself, and raising the indemnities of elected Members is a matter of embarrassment to Parliament. It is a fact, however, that some of our best Members are making great financial sacrifice and incurring indebtedness each year to serve the people they represent. We have examples of that right here in Nova Scotia. Except for the granting of an expense allowance in 1945, there has been no increase in the indemnities since 1930, and the Government felt the time had come to assume responsibility in the eyes of Canadians generally for increasing the indemnities of the people chosen to represent them in the Parliament of Canada.

I thought the housing debate was rather unique from the start. Despite the fact that our National Housing Act is more comprehensive and has been more productive than any other similar act anywhere most Opposition Members criticized it pretty vigorously while, at the same time, avoiding saying specifically that they were opposed to it. It occurred to me, that, under the circumstances, it was only right that they should be given the opporunity of stating clearly where they stood on this measure, and it was with that in mind that I asked the Speaker to call for a recored vote when I wound up the debate on Thursday evening. It was a matter of considerable surprise to many and some enjoyment to a few, when the vote showed 186 in favour of the legislation and only 2 Members (CCF) opposed to it.

Yours very truly,
Robert H. Winters

Helaire D. Boudreau of 5 Beacon Street celebrated his 80th birthday on Tuesday, January 19. Born at Little Anse on Jan. 19th, 1874, he was the youngest son of a family of fifteen and the only one now living. His father, the late Docethe Boudreau died in 1908 at the age of eighty six; his mother, the late Lucy Jeffret Boudreau died in 1901, aged seventy two. She was the daughter of Jean Jeffret who was born in France and who was a soldier in the French Revolution of 1789. He and a Roman Catholic priest escaped from France to St. Pierre, Miquelon and then to Little Anse, Cape Breton where he was hired to teach French and Latin. One of his pupils was the late Ben Marchand of Louisdale.

Helaire left school at the age of fourteen to earn his own living and bought lobsters at Little Anse for the late Henry E. Duff, who was noted for his honesty and sincerity. In 1901 and 1902 he was employed by the Dominion Iron and Steel Co.

In 1907, forty seven years ago he married Martha Bois. As Almighty God did not favour them with children they adopted Joseph Wilfred Landry, son of Mr. and Mrs. Walter J. Landry of Petit de Grat. They are now living in a two family house on Beacon st. Wilfred is married and has three sons, Robert Joseph, James Francis and Paul Stephen.

In 1914 Helaire was appointed officer in charge of the Lobster Hatchery at Arichat and he held that job until the plant was sold. Daniel C. Boudreau of Arichat was one of the Hatchery staff.

In 1923 he left Petit de Grat for the United States. His first three weeks' pay was sixteen dollars per week. On April 21, he obtained employment at the Merrimac Chemical Company at $82. per week, through the recommendation of James Bourque. He now has a pension from the Company and Social Security.

We wish Helaire many happy returns.

Sporting Mountain Echoes

———:O:———

Date of writing is February second and what with the summits and slopes of Sporting Mountain garbed in white and a brilliant sunshining conditions are ideal for the ground hog to discern his shadow today.

Everybody was sorry for the untimely passing of Calvin Kemp McPhail, youngest in the home-circle of Mr. and Mrs. Hugh McPhail of Oban and the family had the sympathy of all.

Little Calvin died of pneumonia developed from an attack of measles.

Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Boudreau recently celebrated the thirty-fifth anniversary of their marriage.

We have no objections to Mr. and Mrs. Boudreau being our neighbours for another thirty-five years.

During the season of peace and goodwill our new neighbours (the Messrs. the Martins and the Kannings) blended with veteran citizens, and made a good impression.

The snow plough went over the top of Sporting Mountain Monday and consequently Cerotha McLennan is destined for good motoring over the mail route today.

Rev. J. M. MacLeod motored up from St. Peters, Monday to see Mr. and Mrs. John Goswell.

Thence he walked up the "Little Road" to our little domicile beside the "big road" and thus were we privileged to a pleasurable social afternoon by the approachable and unpretentious Reverend gentlemen who is sterling through and through.

"I'M ALONE" STORY DRAMATIZED

"On a raw spring morning in 1929 the 10th year of prohibition in the United States, a whisky-laden little schooner was overtaken in the Gulf of Mexico by two American coast guard cutters. As they came up they signaled the schooner to heave to at once—an order her captain acknowledged by grabbing a battered megaphone and shouting, "I'll see you in hell first!"

"John Tnomas Randell, master of the 90-tonner "I'm Alone" was convinced the coast guards had no right to stop him. If his ship had been within one hour's sailing distance of the coast of the United States they could have seized her legally as a suspected liquor smuggler; but by then she had been heading out to sea for almost 50 hours. When they fired a warning shot across her bow and repeated the order to heave to, he merely reached for the megaphone again and bellowed defiantly that he wasn't going to obey it, and that they could sink him if they wanted to. Whereupon they did sink him, in 10,000 feet of blue Gulf water. And by nightfall of that day, March 22, 1929, the indomitable obstinacy of Captain Randell was beginning to make history."

So wrote James Bannerman recently in a Maclean's magazine article about the famous skirmish which strained diplomatic relations between the US and Canada, England and France.

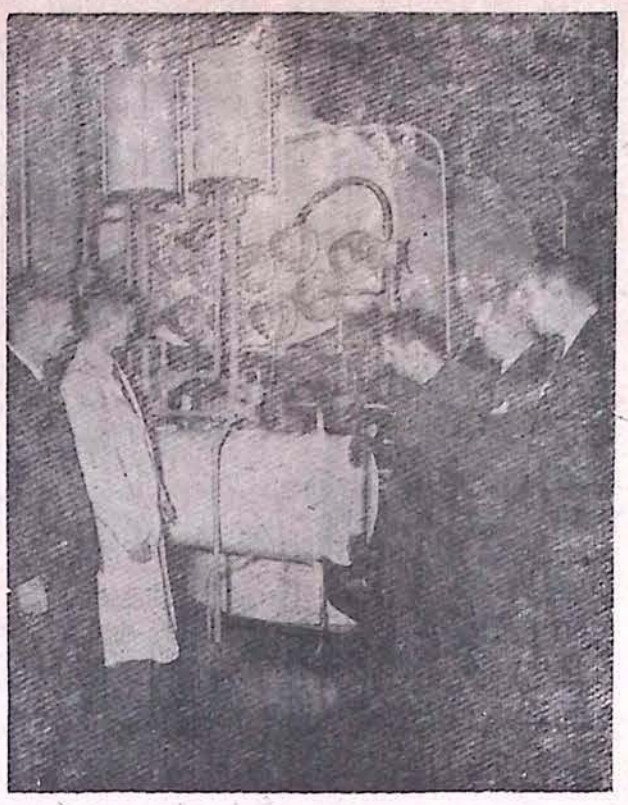

CBC Wednesday Night presents an hour and a half radio version by Bannerman of the same story on February 10 starting at 9.30. Production is by J. Frank Willis.

The incident was viewed with bitterness by Canadians, who, although they freely admitted the I'm Alone was a rumrunner and disapproved, frowned even more strongly upon the idea that the United States could enforce its law on the high seas. The newspapers had a field day. It was agreed that the whole matter would have to be submitted to an international board for arbitration arbitration.

"But," says Bannerman, "it wasn't until the summer of 1933 over four years later, when the international commission appointed to arbitrate the case brought out an interim report--that it could be seen how much the 1929 stories had missed. Since the report was printed as an official document of the American State Department, when the general public had long since forgotten the whole thing, the full story never did become widely known. Overlooked were such things as the spectacular fate of 1200 cases of liquor out of the schooner's first cargo. And the odd way Big Jamie Clark was greeted when he went from New York to Lunenburg to make the deal that started the I'm Alone as a rumrunner.

A $150,000 lubricating oil reclamation plant the first of its kind in Canada to operate on a full scale, is being used by the Canadian Pacific Railway to restore used crankcase oil, renewing its "brand new" qualities, for the railway's growing fleet of diesel locomotives. This plant located at the railway's St. Luc Yard near Montreal, now turns out a daily batch of 375 gallons of reclaimed oil, and can easily triple that amount. Shown inspecting the complicated re-refining equipment are (left to right) F. A. Benger, chief of motive power and rolling stock for the railway; A. B.
