NOVA SCOTIA TEXTILES, LIMITED

WINDSOR --- With the textile industry on a national scale find ing it rough going, it should be a matter of pride to Nova Scotians to know that this industry in this province is booming ahead

Production is climbing and plants are earmarking thousands of dollars for new equipment to push the offensive for bigger markets in the Atlantic provinces and beyond the St. Lawrence. Although faced by the formidable freight rate barrier, outlets for provincial textiles continue to increase.

To find out the whys and wherefores of all this, a writer chatted with pleasant - spoken James D. Macdonald, vice-president and general manager of Nova Scotia Textiles Limited plant here. One didn't have to be an expert to see that business was really humming.

The plant's nearly 200 workers were going "straight out", filling orders for consumers in the seaside provinces and in places as far as the Yukon. This roster of workers doesn't include the nearly two dozen employed in the firm's finishing plant in Bridgetown.

Mr. Macdonald, who started his business career as a banker gave credit to aggressive selling and the production of quality products as among the reasons his firm was forging ahead. And the firm is looking ahead, too. This year the Windsor company will spend a sizeable amount of money on machinery modernization. That will mean a bigger production of knitted goods.

All that will go hand in hand with a stepped up selling drive in the Atlantic provinces. The firm hopes to boost its home market sales from 30 percent up to 60 percent. Distribution is now divided about evenly east of Ontario and west of Ontario.

Nova Scotia Textiles Limited's contribution to the economy of the district is by no means a light one. Its workers' payroll of about $350,000 a year means a lot to Windsor and district.

The firm has an interesting history. Originally it started in Eureka, Pictou county, many years ago. The mill was devoted to weaving woollen suitings and cloth for clothing. This company was succeeded by the Nova Scotia Knitting Company which knitted material for the manufacturing of woollen underwear.

During the First World War, fire destroyed the plant at Eureka Having no home, the industry moved to Windsor where a mill formerly run by Dominion Cotton Company Limited (now Dominion Textile Company Limited) was taken over. In 1921, a new company was incorporated as N. S. Textiles Limited and has been operating as such until this day.

A truly Nova Scotian company is the Windsor textile firm. Nova Scotia capital created it and Nova Scotians run it. J. D. Wood, Halifax, is company president. His father and grandfather had been identified with the earlier company. Directors are Gordon Cooper, Halifax, and Mrs. J. D. Macdonald, Windsor.

The company has gone a long way in 35 years. Business has continuously expanded, and their various lines have been extended. The staple line continues to be woollens, started in the early years, to which have been added fleece, cotton rib, balbriggan, merino and athletic underwear lines.

Windsor Wear, Silver King, Eureka, Evangeline and Acadia are brand names of the firm's products. They are well known brand names now, and two of them closely identify the product with the province in which it is made.

While hosiery and socks constitute an important part of production, various types of underwear for both sexes and all ages are the main products. As a sidelight on underwear, it may be of interest to know that underwear as we understand it today did not come in vogue until the latter part of the last century. Cleanliness and hot baths had, by this time, spread down the social scale and people became more fastidious.

In the 16th century the normal underwear was a shirt for men and a smock for women. Vests and underpants for men, chemis s combinations and a whole trousseau of undergarments for women are of the late 19th century.

First class material is an essential requisite in producing a high quality product. That is why the company has settled on New Zealand lamb's wool. This wool is particularly well suited by nature for underwear cloth, being soft, resilient, an excelint insulator with good spinning properties and freedom from matting and excessive shrinkage.

Sporting Mountain Echoes

We had Buddie Boudreau motor us to St. Peters, Thursday afternoon.

In town we visited at the D. A. Morrison home to see Mr. Morrison who was recovering from a severe attack of "Flu".

At Anse DeLoup enroute home we contacted the pretty and cozy Nicholson home to see the two Margarets, and were pleased to find them well and happy and apparently renewing their youth.

We came away plus a choice pair of winter socks for which we are grateful.

Down through the decades our feet have been familiar with Margaret McDonald's sensible socks.

Mr. and Mrs. John N. Morrison did well to canvass Seaview and Oban in the interests of the United Church, at St. Peters.

Our clergymen are wont to do too much for us gratis.

None of us pretend to be heathens and we all anticipate a Christian burial.

Thus it is meet we take precedent from the late John Angus McPhail who deposited a significant sum for the church that would commit his ashes to the dust in the old community cemetery on the summit of Stewarts Hill.

Dannie Sutherland and Gordon Lohnes recently motored up from the Steel City in pursuit of the elusive deer

Dannie is a veteran of World War Two in which he saw active duty as a corporal, and his brand of service was acknowledged on more than one occasion by his superiors between The Channel and the crossing of the Rhine.

En-route from St. Peters the other day, Mrs. Willie McKay of The Points, and George Carmichael a friend of the family from south of the border stopped in Seaview to secure a duck and a drake.

We wish Mrs. McKay luck with her pretty pair of Kaki Cambells.

It was pleasing to receive a personal letter from an old and unfeigned friend, Mrs. Mary McKenzie who now resides in Falmouth, Nova Scotia.

In lifes heyday Mrs. McKenzie and her husband the late Colin McKenze were our neighborly neighbors in Seaview.

Mr. and Mrs. Neil Sutherland were recent brief motor visitors from Sydney River.

Jean McPhail is employed as housekeeper for Henry Thibeau and his aged mother, Mrs. Jane Thibeau, who recently celebrated her eighty-ninth birthday, but is still no care to anybody.

Having regard to service and remuneration it would be difficult for any domestic to find an equally satisfactory home.

Mr. and Mrs. Leonel LeBlanc were business motor visitors to Sydney on Thursday.

Mr. LeBlanc has replenished the coal bins of all his customers in Seaview vicinity.

When Henry Thibeau had occasion to be in Seaview during the week, he didn't by-pass our little domicile and we enjoyed a chat reminiscent of citizens who were old when we were young.

RED CROSS TO DELIVER GIFTS TO SPRINGHILL

A truck load of "Gifts in Kind" to help the Springhill families of Miners unemployed because of the sealing of the mine, leaves Halifax Tuesday morning. No further clothing is required at present, until the large supply now on hand has been distributed. "The response was tremendous", said C. L. Illsley, Commissioner for the Nova Scotia Division, Canadian Red Cross Society," and we especially appreciate the fact that only clean, immediately wearable clothing was brought in. The public certainly co-operated in bringing good clothing, worth many thousands of dollars."

Mr. Illsley will be in Springhill and will present to the Springhill Disaster Fund a oumber of cheques including one for $1,000.00 from the AVRO Aircraft employees welfare fund of Malton, Ontario.

Of special interest is a cheque for $200.00 from Mrs. (Dr.) D. E. Robertson of Toronto, whose husband the (late) Dr. Robertson was entombed at the Moose River Gold Mine twenty years ago. Mrs. Robertson writes: "Twenty years ago my husband, Dr. D. E. Robertson was caught in the Moose River Mine and after ten days was rescued by the Dragermen, Miners, Engineers and the wonderful people of Nova Scotia. My gratitude and appreciation of these fine men are as great today as it was then and my understanding sympathy for the wives and families of the Miners is most sincere. I am enclosing a cheque for $200.00 not as a measure of my great debt to them, but as a small token of thankfulness for all they did for me and mine. My sons join me in the hope that God will comfort the bereaved and that the future may be made a little brighter for those who suffered most."

D. R. Howard, Commissioner of the new Brunswick Division reported by phone that about $500 had been received at the St. John Red Cross Headquarters and would be forwarded to the fund. Moncton and other branches were also sending canned foods and other gifts of kind.

This wool arrives in bales of 375 pounds each.

Some other raw materials which go into Nova Scotia textiles products are cotton, nylon and rayon. The cotton comes from the United States and Peru. Rayon and nylon are from Canadian sources. From the raw state to the finished product these materials are converted in the Windsor factory, although some of the finishing processes are carried out in the auxiliary plant in Bridgetown.

The company regrets that Nova Scotia produced wool isn't suitable for its purpose. New Zealand has year-round pasturage which produces a wool freer from matting and burrs than Nova Scotia wool. Sheep raisers in this province are handicapped because climatic conditions limit outdoor pasturages to seasonal boundaries.

"We certainly would buy Nova Scotia wool if it was suitable," Mr. Macdonald said. "We could buy it more frequently and in smaller lots than we buy New Zealand wool. A ot of money is tied up when we are forced to buy huge quantities."

That is the story of Nova Scotia Textiles Limited. It pretty much exemplifies the picture in other mills in the province. High quality products, aggressive salesmanship and a determination to exploit the nearest markets seem to be the reasons why textiles forge ahead in Nova Scotia while they lag behind in other parts of Canada.

In the afternoon they motored to Sydney and returned in the evening to the home of the groom where supper was served to 100 guests.
