AT PORT HASTINGS

Judge A. H. MacKinnon Makes Dedication Speech at Unveiling Remembrance Cairn to Angus L.

(This is the final instalment of Judge MacKinnon's Dedication Address, to the late Angus L. Macdonald, at the unveiling of a Remembrance Cairn to his memory at Port Hastings.)

"In 1930, against his own protests, Angus L. Macdonald was named Leader of the Liberal Party by one of the largest conventions hitherto held in the Province. He was so chosen over other men who were highly experienced in political life; and I sometimes think that one of the secrets of his great success in political life was the conviction of the average Nova Scotian that he was their man, and that his placement was due to no other influence than popular demand. That he repaid their trust and confidence in full measure served to increase their love and respect for him.

"There is no test of a man's ability in any department or public life more severe than service as a party leader or as premier; There is no place where so little deference is paid to reputation previously acquired or so eminently won outside; no place where so little consideration is shown for the feelings or failures of beginners. What a man gains in such a position, he gains by sheer force of his own character, and if he loses and falls back, he must expect no mercy and will receive no sympathy. It is a field in which the survival of the strongest is the recognized rule and where no pretence can deceive and no clamour can mislead. The real man is discovered, his worth is impartially weighed, his rank is irreversibly decreed.

"The record established by the late Premier as Leader of his Party and as Premier up to 1940, when he went to Ottawa as Minister of National Defence for Naval Affairs, is too well known for me to comment on it here. It is sufficient to say that he met the test and that his record will ever remain one of the brightest pages in the history of this Province.

"In 1940 Canada was faced with the responsibility of providing a Canadian Navy to patrol the North Atlantic and protect merchant shipping in order to bring maximum aid to a sorely stricken Britain. Prime Minister MacKenzie King called upon Angus L. Macdonald to shoulder this task which was an almost impossible one, since, at that time, Canada's Navy was almost non-existant. Here, the late Premier exhibited an administrative talent of an extremely high order. He amazed even those who recognized his extraordinary ability, and he astounded the world by the creation of a first-class navy within the space of a few years. As a result, this Country was well able to more than discharge her obligation on the sea to the allied cause.

He was able to do this because of great skill at analyzing and classifying, enabling him to dispose of a vast amount of detail with promptness and ease. His clear presentation of officials problems, his considered suggestions and quick conclusions, when all had been considered, combined to show a thoroughness of mental training as rare as was his natural ability to adapt himself to this new and most responsible field of labour. In the House of Commons his eloquence was acknowledged on all sides, and his "Farewell to the Navy" is generally admitted to be one of the finest oratorical efforts which this County, or any other, has produced.

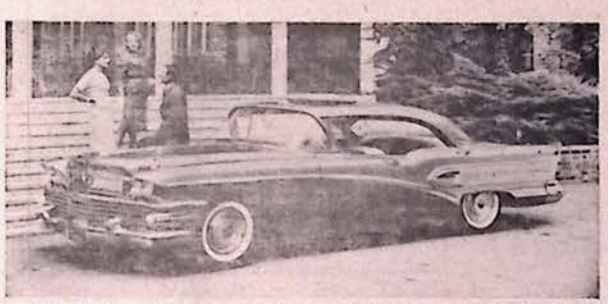

"Although discharging heavy responsibilities as Navy Minister and while receiving glowing tributes from all allied Countries, the late Premier was homesick for his native Province and for the sea which all but surrounds it. When the burdens of war were fully discharged in 1945, he was happy to return home and, once again, assume the mantle of Premier of Nova Scotia. For the next ten years, his administration continued to be the same superior achieving for the people of the Province many important public works which had been dreamed of for many years. Not the least of these was the famed Canso Causeway which stretches before us. It is, indeed, appropriate that this Cairn of Remembrance should overlook the Strait at this spot, for it had always been one of his greatest desires to provide a crossing to connect his equally beloved Island of Cape Breton and the mainland of Nova Scotia. Either bridge or causeway would have been acceptable to him. However, sound engineering advice convinced that the causeway was the more feasible and suitable for this crossing, and so it was done. It is indeed regrettable that he was not able to fulfill another fondest wish: to lead the hundred pipers across the new Causeway on the "Road to the Isles."

"This all too short tribute to the late Premier would be incomplete without reference to his last visit to Scotland in 1953. The first purpose of this visit was to mix the soil of Nova Scotia with the soil of Scotland at Edinburgh Castle, and thus actually perform what had been done by fiction by James VI of Scotland in 1625. The second reason for this visit was to address the great Gaelic Mod at Oban. The impact made by the late Premier at these functions, and on his visits with Mrs. Macdonald to other parts of Scotland was so great that he made a lasting impression on the minds of crofter, business man, Laird and Lord alike. So much so, that a remark was recently made to a person very close to the late Premier by a very highly placed Scot that Angus L. Macdonald was the one man who had the necessary qualities and ability to unite the Scots of the world. I can conceive of no finer tribute coming out of Scotland, for in every two hundred years there was only one other man who came close to doing so, Bonnie Prince Charlie (Prince Charles Edward).

"In the midst of a busy legislative session in 1954, the late Premier was stricken with a severe heart attack and was removed to the hospital. It was typical of him to be impatient of inaction that he insisted on his departmental officials coming to his bedside to review the estimates which were to be presented to the House of Assembly. Always the perfectionist, he could not rest until he was assured that the report was accurate in every detail. I think it is safe to say that this added work was all too great for an already overstrained heart and this Province and Country were shocked to hear of his untimely passing. His death took place in line of duty as surely as any soldier killed on the battlefield, and it can be truly said that he died while performing the task he loved best, serving the people of his native Province.

"The Cairn of Remembrance is typically highland and follows an ancient custom. When the clans were called out to war, each man about to answer the call placed a stone upon a pile, which made up the number of those going to war. As he left for the gathering place, he removed the stone. When the conflict was concluded, each man returning would again return his stone to the pile. Thus, the Cairn was a memorial not only to the dead but to the living who had fought and returned. In the same manner, this Cairn is a memorial to the people of Nova Scotia, who, with

OUR QUEEN AND PRINCE

(Commonwealth Tribute)

Diverse their far flung British fold
All malleable as Temple gold
To Queen and Prince ordained to reign
O'er Commonwealth's united skein.
Her rise includes transcendent scene,
Her orbit one expansive dream;
Replete with God's most Sovereign love
Impressed upon them from above,
The token summons them from home
To share the build of England's throne
More far-a-field and strengthen sakes,
Such battlement joined round each roof
Is all the nations' ample proof,
And shows its not by fire and sword
But where the Spirit's union scored.

Queen Moves With Times

(The following article was taken from the "Christian Science Monitor", of Boston, Mass., telling of Queen Elizabeth's visit to the United States.)

By Richard Strout

The British Crown can move with the times. That is the outstanding impression left as hard-working Queen Elizabeth II and her husband Prince Philip, Duke of Edinburgh flew away to an even harder tour in the United States.

Not in years has the apparatus of the monarchy been under sharper analysis and criticism in Britain than now and the bonfire has jumped the Atlantic.

Even as she flew to Virginia, critical—though not unsympathetic—estimates appear in nationally circulated United States magazines.

The ferment affects the huge Canadian-British-United States entourage of journalists covering the trip.

The so-called Altrincham "incident" in London is countered with the new Malcolm Muggeridge piece, and others, in United States weeklies, sensational excerpts from which are cabled across the Atlantic.

Oblivious to Uproar

Basic question involved in all this is — can the tradition-steeped institution of the Crown change with the times?

The answer written here in Ottawa in a four-day visit is—

"Yes".

The Crown can, and is changing.

Poised, detached, and serene, the petite Queen Elizabeth has seemed oblivious to the uproar. So too, was Prince Philip.

But as though in answer to the tumult these four precedents have fallen in four days.

The Queen has:

1. Made her first live television broadcast in history, speaking face to face with her Canadian subjects.

2. Opened Parliament as the first reigning monarch ever to do so.

3. Played the leading role in the first televised broadcast in history of the brilliant Parliament opening—bringing immediate clamor in London for a similar practice there.

4. Welcomed personally the array of newsmen in attendance here, at a formal reception, shaking the hands of each and chatting with some—a petty incident compared to the others but striking as a symbol of wider social inclusion and of willingness to modify old conventions.

Willingness to Change

Almost everybody agrees that the monarchy must change to survive in the clear, dry air of the New World. What emerges is a rather bold willingness to try.

At the same time the utility of the Crown as a symbol of Dominion and of Commonwealth unity is illustrated in nearly every act of the almost constantly busy Queen.

Canadians support the Crown because they like it and because it is useful.

It represents the fact that the state goes on when politicians fall. To French Canadians who left the Old World before the revolution and who have always been monarchists, it represent a guaranty of ancient culture under a French-speaking Queen. To Canadians as a whole it represents a symbol of national unity against the friendly but overwhelming United States.

The Queen's visit to the United States also represents certain value.

Wedding

WHITE — CUTLER

THURO, Oct. 22—A wedding of interest was solemnized in St. John's Anglican church, on Saturday, October 19, when Helen Florence, daughter of Mrs. Clement O. Cutler, 45 Archibald St., and the late Mr. Cutler, became the bride of Alfred George, son of the late Mr. and Mrs. Francis M. White, Westville. Rev. Louis White of Bridgewater, brother of the groom, performed the double ring ceremony assisted by the Rector Rev. J. Harold Graven.

The bride, given in marriage by her cousin, Dr. J. A. MacLeod, wore a floor-length gown of ivory Alencon lace and net over satin with round neckline, long sleeves coming to a point over the wrists, fitted bodice and full flowing skirt over crinoline. Her head dress was an appliqued finger-tip veil of tulle illusion held in place by a lace coronet matching the gown. She carried a shower bouquet of red Better Time roses pierced with white mums.

Her only attendant was Miss Helen MacLeod who wore pale blue embossed taffeta with matching bolero, headdress and mitts. She carried a cluster bouquet of pink carnations and yellow mums. Dr. Allan MacKay of New Glasgow acted as bestman while the ushers were J. C. Robertson, and L. H. Mattatall, both of Truro.

The church was tastefully decorated with potted ferns and baskets of carnations, snapdragon and mums.

The wedding music was played by the organist. Miss Bertha Dunn who accompanied F. G. Cumming in the solo, "The Lord's Prayer at the beginning of the ceremony and the choir in singing, "Perfect Love" and "We Lift Our Hearts", O Father", during the signing of the register.

Immediately following the ceremony a reception was held at the Scotia Hotel. The toast to the bride was proposed by Rev. Louis White and fittingly responded to by the groom. Miss Heather Mattatal niece of the groom, was in charge of the guest book.

Following the reception the bride and groom left by rail on a wedding trip to Hamilton, Ont., returning through Flordia, U.S.A. For travelling the bride wore a dusty rose suit with mehusine hat with mink jacket and accessories in keeping. Her corsage was sweetheart roses.

The bride is widely known in Antigonish County where for several years she was in business in that locality. The groom is a locomotive engineer with the Canadian National Railways at Stellarton.

The Richmond Record joins with the many friends of the newlyweds in wishing them a long and happy wedded life.

Royal Visit to the U.S.A.

American interest in the trivia of the daily life of the Royal Family has been called "soap opera" though it is asked in turn whether such interest is not healthier than a Hollywood movie star.

But in deeper symbolism the charming Queen personifies Anglo-American kinship and the magnificant common tradition of the two lands.

One accompanying difficulty is the ease with which journalists with a common tongue can take pot shots across the Atlantic. There have been instances of this in the current trip.

An occupational hazard of the Crown is the syrupy approach of fashion pages. They offer a daily quota of sliced marshmallow covered with treacle.

Hardest problem of all is for the Queen to mix with the multitude and preserve the mystique of royal detachment.

The fact is that if you put a Queen on a bicycle, as the Dutch do, you endanger the air of mysterious aloofness hitherto considered inseparable from the royal symbol.

How thrilling this symbol can be was illustrated at the opening of Parliament, and at every troop review, as proud standards sank to the dust in obeisance to the Queen.

How personal it can be was illustrated when the Queen, after an enormous state reception Oct 15 at which she shook hands with 1,342 largest in history kicked off her shoes in an anteroom as she sat in weariness over a cup of tea.

Ottawa echoes the words of Winston Churchill at the Coronation:

"Here is the lady whom we respect because she is our Queen, and whom we love because she is herself."
