SUGAR and SPICE

By Bill Smiley

How come they're killing off all the big fellows this year? First it was Clark Gable, then Gary Cooper, and now it's Ernest Hemingway. When indestructibles like these are suddenly mowed, it makes us other old soldier's-of-fortune realize, with a shudder, that even for us the bell must toll one day.

In an age where men think it's a big adventure to go duck hunting, when they think it's rugged, he-man stuff to cook on their backyard barbecues— these men were our folk heroes. These were the giants who kept us aware that once men were brave and violent and wild and gallant.

How we swaggered through the belles with Gable in Gone With the Wind! How we stood up with him to the fury of the vicious Captain Bligh, in Mutiny on the Bounty! How we gathered the lucious women in droves merely by joining him in quirking an eyebrow!

Many a lone and dusty Western street we stalked with Gary Cooper, hand poised ready for the draw, eyes darting to the upper windows, where the rifle barrels poked. Many a lonely ranch we rode up to with him, our past a mystery.

How often have we strolled with Hemingway the festive streets of a Spanish town, girls tossing roses to us from balconies! How many times have we sat with him in the great arena, squirting the native wine from the goat-skin into our mouths, as we waited for death in the afternoon, the fanfare of trumpets, the march of the matadors!

Don't try to tell me that a lot of cleancut young fellows called Rock and Tab and Rip and Kirk and Dirk are going to fill the boots of Gable and Cooper.

Please don't try to tell me that these earnest young men in crew cuts and horn-rimmed glasses, who write as though they had swallowed a dictionary of psychological terms, are going to oust Hemingway of the clean, stripped prose, the haunting poetry.

These were the men who were what all of us wanted to be— the dead shots, the mighty drinkers, the lady-killers, the devil-may-care adventurers. Honest, Mom, I don't want to be just a timid old school teacher. I want to have a beautiful countess goofy over me. I want to out-draw the fastest gun in the west. I want to shoot a lion.

It's a lot of fun mowing the lawn, but I'd rather mow down six or eight cattle rustlers. I like a game of bridge, but my heart yearns for Russian Roulette. I know I have trouble getting the top off a jar of pickles, but I have a yen to bend horseshoes with one hand.

I suppose a lot of you women will think this is immature. But the truth, however bitter, is that you just haven't been able to tame the wild man that lurks in every male breast.

You think we're just sitting there, half asleep, watching television, don't you? Well, next time there's a showdown on the screen, observe the grim set of our jaws, see the fingers of our gun hands curl.

Keep an eye on our eyebrows next time Sophia Loren heaves into view. They'll be so quizzical you could hang a water pail on them.

Note the way our eyes narrow, next time we're out in

Graduates In Medicine

Herman A. Samson, B.Sc., M. D., son of the late Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Samson, of Petit de Grat, was granted his Doctorate in Medicine, recently, from the University of Ottawa, Ottawa, Ontario, after having attended this institution for the past four years.

Prior to this, he had attended St. F. X. University, Antigonish, N. S., where he received his B.Sc. degree in 1956.

Dr. Samson will be leaving shortly for Detriot, Michigan, where he will be taking his internship and plans to take post-graduate work in surgery.

Story of Evangeline had Happier Counterpart

(The following taken from the Yarmouth Herald was written by Benoit Jeddy and we are sure will be of great interest to our readers.—Ed.)

Henry Wadsworth Longfellow was born in Portland, Maine, on February 27, 1307. He appeared during the same period as Emerson, 1803, Hawthorne, 1809, and Lowell, 1819, all great American writers who were later to become some of his best friends.

At an early age Longfellow showed signs of a keen imagination and an inclination towards poetry. His professor, Mr. Carter, tells us. "Young Henry Longfellow is one of the best students that we have in school. He spells and writes well. He adds and does Arithmetic well. His conduct is perfect."

Longfellow spent five years at a college about twenty-five miles from his home. This college was named "Bowdain" after a Frenchman called Pierre Beaudoin. He was 15 years of age when he entered college. He was modest and studious. He read such authors as Washington and Irving. While at college he composed a number of poems which appeared in the "N. S. Literary Gazette."

ENDED STUDIES

In 1825, Longfellow ended his studies at "Bowdain". What was his vocation? His father wanted him to become a lawyer but Longfellow answered, "I can not become a lawyer because I have no talent to argue; I am not good enough to become a minister and I just hate medicine." And he added, "I wish to write poetry."

Longfellow married twice. In 1831 while 24 years of age, he married Mary Stores Porter of Portland. However, a couple of years later while on a visit to Europe with him she took seriously ill and died. He remained a widower for seven years and then married Miss Frances Appleton, a young lady of the best society in Boston. From this marriage six children were born, two boys Charles and Ernest, three girls, Alice, Allegra and Edith. The other died at childbirth.

After his marriage to Miss Appleton he purchased a house called "Craigie House" at Cambridge, Mass., where he spent the remainder of his life. He became a professor at Harvard University. It is here that Longfellow was later to write his poem "Evangeline" (1845—1847).

GREAT BENEFACTOR

This great benefactor of the Acadian people came to know the story of Evangeline and her lover Gabriel by a French-Canadian lady who had married Judge Haliburton and lived in Boston.

In 1355, a protestant minister by the name of Rev. Horace Lorenzo Conolly from Salem was placed in charge of an Episcopalian Church (St. Matthew's) of Boston. One day Mrs. Haliburton related to him the story of the Expulsion of the Acadians especially the story about the two lovers who were separated at Grand-Pre, and after many years had been reunited in a Hospital at Louisiana. The story impressed Rev. Conolly profoundly. He related this story to his friend Nathaniel Hawthorne, the great American novel writer. However, after trying for three years, Mr. Hawthorne said, "It is a good story but it is not in my veins".

TOLD BY MINISTER

A few years later Hawthorne came to visit Longfellow and brought with him the minister. It is here that the minister related the story to Longfellow. After Longfellow had heard the story and Hawthorne had assured him that he was not going to use it, he immediately said that he was going to write a poem on it, this is how our Acadian heroine became immortalized.

It is, therefore, here that the immortal poem "Evangeline" began in 1845 and ended on February 27, 1847. Longfellow was now 40 years old. It was a poem with 1,400 verses.

The poem immediately became very popular. It is related that a lady, by the name of Mrs. Nordon, who is very well known in the literary world read it 20 times. The scene where the two lovere met without knowing each other touched her profoundly. Since its publication the poem has been translated into 20 different languages. In Canada it was translated

Diary of a Vagabond

BY DOROTHY BARKER

More Reasons Why Northland Lures

Famous fishing lakes in northern Ontario bush country look like green tea that has been steeped for centuries. Calm, dark, sometimes shading almost to ebony in their great depth, their shorelines drop invariably from tree line to the burial ground of old trees time and weather have cast beneath the water's edge.

When I peered over the side of the boat to see the bottom of Shoo Fly Lake, I realized only a nat[illegible]sh-man co[illegible]d find [illegible]der-water ga[illegible]ater cannot gr[illegible]avor-ite fo[illegible]se, whose herds [illegible]casing in the barding [illegible] north of Cap-reol, Ont[illegible] Pete Chenier, my guide during a recent fishing adventure, found one of these gardens for me. It was in a sandy bay and because I asked what the peculiar looking objects were, seen floating on the water like dead fish, bellies up, Pete jockeyed the boat nearer shore. He explained, last year's growth that was not devoured by moose floats to the surface when the new crop germinates.

Pete's nature lore was fascinating. While we trolled the bays and inlets he taught me how to recognize a "live" beaver house and those that had been abandoned. My city eyes were soon able to spot beaver slides, which are paths worn through the woods to the water's edge, where these industrious small animals haul the poplars they fell for eating and construction. I learned about the banker beaver too, one of nature's renegades, who finds a hole in the lake's bank and subsists on the bark from poplar logs that drift by. These lazy types never make any effort to join a house, or do their stint of building.

Rain, which came down in spasmodic deluges, could not dampen our fishing ardour. Before we left shore, Pete found a pair of plastic pants in the truck and offered them to me to pull over my slacks. They were about as manageable as a bowlful of jello on the edge of a volcano. Everytime I moved from boat to shore they would slip to half mast, get tangled with pole and paddle and send Pete into hysterics.

Most of the time I sat in the prow of the boat in ecstatic misery with small rivulets running off my slicker hood into the tops of my fancy shoes, my line trailing far behind with a lure attached which apparently no fish could resist. With beginner's luck I got more nibbles than a penny stock salesman, had swallowed hooks with my lunch every time Pete removed the lure from a catch with a pair of pliers. I shuddered with unsportsmanlike anguish when he hooked the fish through the gills and hung it over the side of the boat on a chain.

Pete assured me I would eventually become accustomed to it. Sure enough, the fascination of waiting for that tug on my line was soon greater than my dreaded anticipation of having to land a flipping, flopping, slithery hunk of fish flesh.

Indian Fire Best

Pete Chenier's eyes know the portent of every cloud. A drizzle can be endured, but when I heard Pete say, "Reel in fast", I knew we were headed for the biggest spruce tree on shore to seek shelter from a downpour. Peeling soggy bark from a dead birch, he quoted Canada's first citizens, "White man build big fire, burn face freeze backside; Indian build little fire, soon warm all through."

My woodsman guide knows the danger of fire in the bush. He saw Shoo Fly Lake burned over in 1941. Each time we had to take shelter ashore to dry out our sodden selves, he took pains when the skies cleared to scatter the fire, douse it with water and wait until the last ember had died. Pete reveres the privilege of fishing and hunting in this northland country. He never misses an opportunity to impress anglers and hunters with the hazard of fire.

* * * *

Canada's Isolationists

These northern camp operators I wager, are the only Canadian taxpayers who are not clamoring for bigger and better road systems. They are content to drive the lumber tote roads that lace the bush and would jar the molars out of a brass monkey. When they want access to a lake by a new route, they commandeer the help of native Indians and blaze a new trail. A northern bushman knows every pot hole on these wooden roads. In the spring when trucks that take anglers from one lake to another get mired they calmly cut down a few poplars, jack up their vehicle to bridge the muck and are soon on their way.

"The CN transcontinental line is all the transportation we need. It brings in our supplies, our guests and their gear," said Mary Chenier, who is the only woman camp owner I could discover in that region. "Our business would soon be ruined if good roads made it possible to gain easy access by car to these lakes. Earnest anglers and hunters are only satisfied when they can get away from civilization and wrestle with nature."

If you could roll all the old clinches such as "last frontier, new horizons and pioneer spirit" into one, you would have a pretty accurate picture of Mary Chenier and her railway-foreman husband, Pete, their characteristics and life in the back-

Mother and Daughter Banquet At St. George's Channel Consodidated School

On Wednesday evening, June 28th. a delightful Mother and daughter banquet, was held in the South Mountain Consolidated school at St. George's Channel. The banquet was sponsored by the West Bay C. G. I. T. group, under the direction of Rev. Sidney, and Mrs. Snow and Miss Inas MacLean, teacher of West Bay school. Invited guests were ladies of the West Bay and Black River W. M. S. also Rev. and Mrs. Matinson of St. Peter's United Church.

The spacious class-room done in pastel blue and white afforded a suitable setting for the gaily arranged tables. Places were set for fifty-four people and place cards neatly designed with a tiny bird perched on the corned, seemed to bid a cherry welcome. A large bouquet of red peonies centered the middle of the table, where also was placed the C. G. I. T. Anniversary cake, a master piece by Mrs. Malcolm MacLean and Miss Inas MacLean.

While the dinner was being prepared, the guests assembled in the junior classroom (equally attractive in pastel pink and white) where Rev. Snow introduced Rev. and Mrs. Matinson of St. Peters. Mrs. Snow charmingly attired in pale yellow with accessories in soft green, pinned a corsage on Mrs. Matinson, after which the girls chic in their white middies and dark skirts did likewise to their mothers. Then all paraded to the tables. Rev. Snow asked the blessing, and after enjoying a delicious dinner, the program was opened, when Miss Marlene MacLean, toastmaster, introducing Miss Linda Morrison, called for a toast to the Queen. Then all sang "God Save the Queen."

Phyllis MacInnes, then proposed a toast to the Mothers and Mrs. Phil MacInnes responded with the purpose. After the Anniversary Cake was apportioned, Rev. Sidney and Mrs. Snow spoke, thanking the people for their co-operation and help which was effective in making the program a success.

Mrs. Calder MacDougall, president of the Black River W. M. S., in turn and on behalf of the Auxiliary, thanked the C. G. I. T. group and leaders for the kind invitation and for the joyous evening spent with them.

Judy Babbin on beltalf of the C. G. I. T. group presented their leaders, Mrs. Snow and Miss MacLean with gifts after which a sing song concluded the program. Mrs. Bessie MacKay was organist.

The congregation regrets that the services of Rev. and Mrs. Snow terminates by the last of August. They will be greatly missed, by the young and old, but memories of their splendid service, their co-operation and friendliness, will be an inspiration to all who benefited by them, as well as a lasting cherished memory.

LIQUOR ADS. TO BE ALLOWED IN N. S.

Liquor advertising in Nova Scotia daily and weekly newspapers and on radio and television will be permitted under a new liquor advertising code announced recently in Halifax.

The new policy, revealed by the Nova Scotia Liquor Commission, is similar to that adopted by Ontario more than a year ago.

The policy will become effective progressively, allowing liquor advertising in daily and weekly newspapers from August 1; radio and television Sept. 1; and in magazines, periodicals and other media after October 1st.

Garbage Collector

Residents of Isle Madame and Louisdale, can now have garbage trucked to a dumping area in the Louisdale district.

See advertisement in this issue showing when and where garbage is collected.

Also another advertisement inserted by the Municipal Clerk, pointing out this law governing the removal and disposal of garbage.

IN MEMORIAM

In loving memory of my dear husband, Henry C. Edwards, who passed away on July 5th, 1958.

Oh! what would I give to clasp your hand
Your dear kind face to see,
Your loving smile, your welcome voice
That meant so much to me.
No one knows the silent heartache
Only those who have such can tell
Of the grief that is borne in silence
For one I loved so well.

Always remembered by his loving wife, —Alice.

the boat, as they peer into the distance, seeing things you've never dreamed of.

And look out for that little, dangerous smile that barely curls the corner of our mouth, at the next meeting of the Home and School Club, when the chairman asks for a frank statement of opinion.

They've taken away our old comrades-in-arms. But Cooper and Gable and Hemingway have given us a code to live by. On the surface, we may be a burnt-out lot. But behind that pot belly, beneath that wispy skull, the fires are smouldering, the courage is white-hot, the will is of iron, and the devilish charm is just biding its time until the first countess comes along.

WINGS OVER CAPE BRETON — A flock of racing pigeons launch themselves for a 218-mile flight to their roosts at Cape Breton. The birds were sent to Moncton by the Cape Breton Pigeon Racing Club and released by CN Express terminal agent Jack Mayer. A yearling hen, Sweet Lady, owned by Walter Marks, was the first bird to return to Florence, Cape Breton. Sweet Lady completed the trip in seven hours and 40 minutes. Two other birds owned by Mr. Marks captured second and third places in the race. The club has often made use of CN Express facilities to race pigeons over a number of different courses in the Maritimes. (CN Photo) woods. Though the opportunity has presented itself for them to live all year round in the settled railway junction community of Capreol, Mary's love of the bush country is only satisfied when she is coping with encroaching nature.

Some years ago, when Pete was transferred as a section foreman from Felix to Capreol, they sold their camp at Shoo Fly Lake. Mary, who can fell trees, shoot like a man, bake bread and churn butter, hungered for the woods where she had learned to survive by her wits. That is why Chenier's Camp came into existance. While Pete continues with his railway job, only guiding on his days off, Mary runs the camp.

I could understand a little how she felt when I stood in that vast cathedral of trees and sky listening to the stir of wild life and learning something of the excitement of the kill, whether it be fish, fowl or bigger game. Mary is content that the only evidence of modern civilization in her woodsy world is a flag stop on a through railroad.
