SUGAR and SPICE

By Bill Smiley

There's been quite a fracas recently in one Canadian town over its school policy toward repeaters. Bone of contention is the suspension from high school of seven pupils. Each was repeating his year, each was over 16, and all were given the gate "for habitual neglect of duty."

This particular incident occured in Wiarton, Ont., and as a former editor of the best little old weekly newspaper in Wiarton and a present school teacher, I followed the clash with more than usual interest.

It began with a red herring, when the mother of one of the suspended pupils charged the principal with discrimination because the girl in question was an Indian. I knew this was poppycock but held my peace.

Sure enough, the charge was vigorously countered in the next issue, not by the principal but by his students. They claimed that Indian students took part in all school activities and were treated with equality and respect in the classrooms. The letter also pointed out that there were five non-Indian pupils suspended.

The chairman of the board backed the principal by quoting chapter and verse under which the youngsters were shown the door. A former clergyman in the parish, now teaching in a U. S. college, wrote a hot defense of the principal's action, claiming it was not only good for the students suspended but for the others as well. Still another letter roundly abused the principal for his stand.

Important thing to come out of the scuffle was not the discrimination charge, which was patent nonsence, but the fact that a principal and a school board had the nerve to penalize by suspension a number of pupils who were not pulling their weight.

It's no secret that there's a percentage of students in every school which falls into this category. For various reasons - parental indifference, psychological problems, or just plain lassitude —they refuse to work. Many of them have average intelligence.

Some of them are content to sit all day like vegetables, drowsing, dreaming, doodling. They are no trouble to anybody and no use to anybody. Others, more lively, but just as adamant in their rejection of work, spend their time in a running battle with authority. They have a compulsion to attract attention. These are the discipline problems, the people who disturb other pupils, the people who push some teachers every year into nervous breakdowns.

What's to be done with these people? In my day, they drifted out of school by a natural process, and found a job. Most of them became reasonably useful members of society. Some did very well in business and industry, when they shook of the dust of the classroom.

But they're facing today a society that neither wants nor needs them. Heavy Machinery and automation have gobbled laborers' and factory jobs. Employers demand evere-higher educational standards.

Remember that we're speaking, not of slow learners, but of those with normal intelligence who won't work. I don't have the answers, but I do think some kind of drastic action should be taken if their abilities are not to be wasted, if they are not to become a permanent burden on society.

Should these young people whatever the reason for their refusal to work, be allowed to disrupt the system, set a bad example to others, and generally act as a brake on the educational process? They would not be tolerated in business, industry or the armed forces. After high school, they are no longer babied. At university, technical school, nursing school, those who refuse to work are plowed under, and nobody weeps for them.

Faced with the same problems of over-crowding and staff shortage as our schools, even our hospitals meet them squarely. Beds are for sick people, not for those who

E. C. Doyle Speaks for Ratepayers Association at Council Session

The following is a text of the submission by the Richmond County Ratepayers Association to the Municipal Council of the Municipality of the County of Richmond, at its 1962 Annual Meeting, and so read by its Secretary-Treasurer, E. C. Doyle:

Mr. Warden, Councillors and Mr. Clerk:

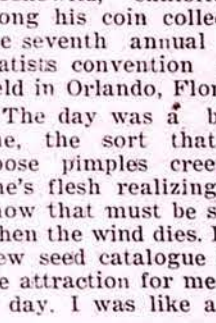

We are here, our President, Mr. Wilferd M. Poirier, myself as its secretary and other of its members, too, for the first time, introduce to your Honourable Body the newly-born Richmond County Ratepayers Association. This organization's conception and birth stems from a duly held Public Meeting at the St. Peters Municipal Hall, in the fall of the year just closed, in response to the County wide demand that some sort of action be taken to press back the alarming rising TIDE of Municipal Rates and Taxes. Today we are happy to report, barring the few instances wherein halls were refused, the idea was well received, and its membership, representative of all the fifteen Municipal Districts, is continually growing.

Its ideals and purpose are unfettered politically, indeed it cuts clear and firmly across party lines, consequently, is absolutely free to nail high on its banner that Historic Slogan, quote: —"Equal Rights to All, But But Special Privileges to None"—end of quote.

Rest assured that this organization's idea and purpose is not to tear down the financial fabric of our municipality, neither will it resort to the circulation of smoke screens and sand clouds, rather it is committed to action of the kind that will tend to keep firm our Municipal monetary set up, as laid down by those who, by sacrifices of both time and money, built Richmond County. Our forebears scorned at the idea of levying an undue burden of taxes upon the little man, realizing a policy of that kind was crippling to his best interests, his home, his earning power, and his right to happiness in his lifetime; they realized that by virtue of his numberes — being the greater number—he was the life stream of the Municipality, it could not continue without him.

Mr. Warden and Councillors on the above mentioned grounds, briefly stated tho it may be, we are ready to co-operate with you, otherwise we must, and we will, Stand and fight.

Diary of a Vagabond

BY DOROTHY BARKER

MINING FOR GOLD IN A PIGGY BANK

The picture wasn't spectacular. A one-column image of a hand holding a coin, it proved arresting enough for my eyes to wander among the cutlines. Probably my curiosity was aroused because the day before I had purchased a coin catalogue to send to an elderly gentleman hoping to encourage his latent hobby enthusiasm and help fill time that hangs heavily for him these frosty days.

The story the picture told was of a privately minted $50 gold "slug" valued at $12,000. It's owner, Irving Moskowitz, exhibited it among his coin collection at the seventh annual Numismatists convention recently held in Orlando, Florida.

The day was a blizzardy one, the sort that makes goose pimples creep along one's flesh realizing all the snow that must be shovelled when the wind dies. Even the new seed catalogue held little attraction for me on such a day. I was like a restless housebound child, tired of watching the actions of half frozen chickadees huddled on the feeder, bored with reading and fed up with hunting for a dropped stitch in my knitting.

Hours and minutes stretched ahead before supper time, when I could vent my energy on a souffle and my imagination on a dessert. I fingered through the coin catalogue. My eyes bulged at the worth of a Canadian penny. Why there wasn't one listed worth less than .20 and many were valued at dollars, not cents!

The piggy bank on the bookcase shelf has stood there for years. A ready deposit for coppers that can load one's purse and a quick resort when the milkman needs change, it clinked heavily every time I raided its lode. Maybe it had a message of fortune hidden in its ceremic belly.

100 PENNIES WORTH $22.00

My hands trembled like that of old Midas as I shook the coins from the bank onto the dining room table and stacked them in the sequence of their years. Might as well be methodical about this treasure hunt, time was something I could now profitably squander. I tried not to be too disappointed when I discovered there were only two dated 1932, which proved to be the most ancient coins in the collection.

When they were all scrutinized for dots, flaws, or the condition of each coin. I emptied the loose change from my purse and hunted for a strap on the Queen's shoulder which, the catalogue informed me, added a great deal of value to a silver piece minted at Ottawa. My Queens were all bare shouldered, but it amused me to discover that even a 1958 dime was worth double its face value to a collector.

I rummaged in my jewel case for other coins that, up until now had only sentimental value. One was a silver dollar. During the depression my husband gave it to me as a birthday present. "Never spend this and you'll never be broke," he advised me. Today, it is worth $3.50. There were four wartime brass nickles minted during the 39-45 world struggle because of a shortage of silver. Their total value is listed at $11.00.

SIXPENSE WORTH A MILLION MEMORIES

I couldn't find the worth of the other coin -- chiefly because English money is not listed in the catalogue. Its face value however could never equal what it means to me. When I was a YWCA hostess on the RCAF station where Fleet Air Arm flyers were trained, it was my self-appointed task to sew a sixpence beneath the wings of each graduate after Wings Parade. This was a luckey token and as vital to them as their commissions.

It was the day the final class earned the right to "put up their wings" that one of the lads handed me my sixpence. "Keep it, mam, it will bring luck to you and help to remind you that all these fellows who have trooped through this Hostess House, class after class, are really grateful for all you and the YWCA have done to make our training period in Canada as happy as possible."

IN TIMES OF CRISIS

How to live in a time of crisis? This is the question one hears most often in these unsettled times, with bad news flashed at us on the hour every hour.

Some men escape the tension of the timese, or try to, by hard concentration on daily details of life—the morning shave, the office mail, the chores that must be done. It helps. Such concentration is useful. Yet it is not enough.

Man has a great deal of leisure nowadays. It isn't spent in meditation, though; it is more often used up in a hectic search for distraction. Even grandfather, who used to sit in his rocker and puff quietly on the old corn cob, is busy now switching from one TV channel to another.

Every civilization which has risen to a high peak has gone through a period much like this one. All grand cultures seem to have within them the seeds of their destruction; or tey tempt barbarians to destroy them. Remember the Chinese Wall, the Roman roads, Memphis and Babyon?

Our present civilization, based on Christian values, on the relatively new (as history goes) idea of the per-feel like a rest. Out you go unless you need hospital care.

Would fear of being kicked out of school for failure to work have the desired effect on the lazy, the emotionally disturbed, and the others who make up this indigestible lump in our high schools? Or would it have no more effect on them than the constant cajoling, urging and threatening they now undergo, both at home and at school?

Should they all be turned out of school into the cold, cruel world at 16? Should they all be psychoanalyzed. Should their parents be fined or sent to jail if the kids don't achieve a passing mark? Or would any such drastic action leave a stigma upon them which they would never overcome?

Lots of questions. Who has the answers? Let's have a forum on it. Many intelligent thoughtful people read this column. What do you think? Is suspension of non-workers in high school a positive or aegative approach? What alternatives are there? Let's hear your opinions. Send them along to the editor of your local paper, and we'll thrash this thing around until we get everybody hopping mad.

Maybe it is still worth only sixpence, maybe it is valued at double that amount, but to me it is worth a million memories.

Tarnished almost to black, I put the coins back in their silkin keeping place, gathered the pennies into a heap and started dropping them one by one back into the piggy bank. If any one wants a 1962 penny "UNC", I have one along with a few dozen others worth ten and twenty times their face value, so the catalogue says.

OF MANY THINGS

sonal dignity of the individual. is now challenged on a broad front. A society, ruled by men who scoff at the idea of a personal God, has boasted that we are softening up, that we are ripe for conquest, that they'll rule us and all the world within the next ten or fifteen years.

Can we go on, then, as we are? Is it enough to try to bury ourselves in the daily chores, or to immerse ourselves in hectic activity?

No, it is not. If you can believe the mental health statistics, it far from enough. We cannot stop here, or we are done for.

There must be, for each of us, if we aree to have health and peace of mind, a personal redication to the Christian values which created our civilization W seem to have forgotten the divine potentialities of the individual man. Carlyle said, "The great law of culture is let each become all that he was created capable of being."

We have been blind, as were the people of the Roman empire and other cultures. We have been placing our faith in the daily details, and in men or events, rather than in spiritual strength to which we once turned so often. Without such a rededication, our future has no logical promise.
