Diary of a Vagabond

BY DOROTHY BARKER

A YOUNGSTER'S REACTION

It wasn't the weird effect created by film and sound which the Government of the United States has successfully projected to simulate a trip to the moon, Ford's imaginary rocket ride into space, or General Motors co-operation with the State of Washington to create the "World of Tomorrow", where thousands every day are elevated in a Bubbleator into what we may expect of the coming century.

None of these thrilling spectacles at the Seattle World's Fair amazed me quite as much as young Rickey's casual acceptance of the forecast for his adult existence.

I am quite sure if a Gayway "barker" had tried to rent him an aluminum pressurized space suit with a promise that he could swing on a star while I rambled around the Fine Arts building, he would have taken it quite casually.

Rickey will never be a patron of the arts. The only object in this startling and highly imaginative collection of modern oils and statuary at the Seattle World's Fair that rang a bell with him, was the Rube Goldberg contraption "Metamatic" created of welded trash that went off like o small bomb at intervals jangling its old saws, tricycles, headlight rims and heaven knows what, like a Hoochie Koochie dancer.

I found today's eleven-year-old boy is much more mature than any of us give him credit for being. He has been raised on "Orbits" breakfast food, watched Glenn and Carpenter blast off into outer space on his school TV. Sputnicks, Echoes, Thor missiles and space travel are not scientific marvels to him, or even exciting. His world of tomorrow has already arrived.

Rickey's maturity was most apparent when he entered Canada House. This exhibit was something he could get his intellectual molars into. I was interested in his first remark, "Canada is showing the world what we are doing in the 20th century to prepare for Century 21. Not a lot of fancy plastic models like most exhibits. This is REAL!"

The map of Canada, that dominates our country's participation in this World's Fair, is so beautiful it has had wide publicity. Well-deserved praise from the stream of humanity that trudges from one building to the other along the International Boulevards has been audible.

Created of copper and brass, its acquamarine water areas and colored lights that point up the industrial development of Canada, make an effective mural so large I could only focus less than half in the lens of my camera standing at a distance of some thirty feet. What is planned for the eventual resting place of this masterpiece was not revealed in any of the articles which appeared in newspapers during our stay in Seattle, but I would hope that it will have a prominent place in Canada where Canadians and visitors alike can admire it for some time to come.

Besides the map, there were actual working models of a newly-developed perforated breakwater, the cobalt bomb for the treatment of cancer, reactors, and Top Side Sounder satellite. Realistically, the high arctic community of the future was modelled so convincingly it hardly seemed improbable that in less time than the life span of a human being this wasteland may be dotted with high - rise apartment buildings built on stilts above the permafrost to accommodate future population of this area. This imaginary project I could envision for I saw some small measure of what is being researched and planned for the Arctic on my trip to Churchill two years ago.

But don't get the impression that the "Home of Tomorrow" with its fantastic construction and use of light for living and the echo of what is ahead in the field of transportation, did not register with both Rickey and his grandmother as being not only plausible but possible. Man will not only be travelling above the earth in capsules, he will be riding in cloud-like comfort on rails, in clear-view two-decker coaches, where he can recline in automatically controlled, foam padded seats, while his car goes along with him, stored "below deck" for easy access when he gets a yen to hit a "thruway".

Century 21 promises to be a combination of earthbound gravity, when it will no doubt be a treat to have both feet on the ground, a constant whirl into space and a zoom ride on rails as smoothe as jelly slipping over a hot plate.

Youngsters will have no difficulty in adjusting to these promises. As Rickey remarked, "All conditions are GO and I really mean GO". We of my generation may have a future job as traffic cop sitting in a pearly booth on a pink cloud. It looks from where I stand right now, as though the human population of this old earth is going to need some angelic directing.

Weddings

WHITE - FOUGERE

On July 7th., St. Joseph's Church was the scene of the wedding of Brenda Ann, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Alzear Fougere of Boudreauville, and Francis Cameron White, only son of Duncan White and the late Mrs. White of Whiteside.

The double ring ceremony was performed by Rev. John MacDonald, P. P.

Miss Betty - Anne Boucher of Arichat was organist, while the St. Joseph's choir and the Arichat choir rendered appropriate hymns during Mass and the signing of the register.

The bride who was given away by her father, was winsome in her full length gown of nylon over white bridal satin, worn over a hooped crinoline. The fitted bodice was fashioned on princess lines, with a bateau neckline trimmed with sequins and pearls, and with long tapered sleeves. Flounces of sheer nylon added back interest to the bouffant skirt. Her veil of silk illusion, held in place by a double tiara of sequins and pearls,

SUGAR and SPICE

By Bill Smiley

One of my Grade 12 students is taking off in the morning on a trip I rather envy him. He's heading for Vancouver, on a bicycle.

All he has to do is pedal through the great loneliness of Northern Ontario, ant-crawl the endless prairies, toil across the Rockies and push the last long stretch through the vastness of B. C.

* * * *

He has a brand-new bike, $50 in cash, one army blanket and a big supply of peanut butter sandwiches, to commence his journey. Also, of course, he has one other thing—a stout heart.

When he reaches Vancouver, he will sell his bicycle and set off for the Yukon. He hopes to work there for a year, save a stake, then return home and go back to school to complete his education.

He wants to be a writer. Thousands of young people have the same desire, but they never do anything about it except dream about all the money a writer is supposed to make. This fellow does something about it. He writes all the time—poems, stories, paragraphs — struggling heroically with a natural inclination to misspell. He's going to keep a daily journal on his trip.

He could have chosen no better method of acquiring the experience and material so helpful to a budding writer. There will be 50 stories, a hundred poems, a thousand incidents, in the strip of Canada across which his wheels will roll this summer.

I envy him, as I said. He will grow brown and hard. He will lie beneath the stars and yearn. He will heat pork and beans beside a mountain stream. And he will meet a thousand interesting people. Some of them will be mean, most of them friendly.

* * * *

He will see a Canada that the passenger on transcontinental train or jet liner never sees. He will smell pines and see ripening wheat and feel the sun on his back in the morning, and hear coyotes yapping at night.

He will savor the joys of hot food in an empty belly, warmth after "zero at the bone," conversation after loneliness, rest after exhaustion. He will marvel at sunset on the prairies and the moon setting fire to a tiny lake. He will encounter hospitality that will enrich him with an abiding faith in human kindness.

It is very lucky, he will have the most rewarding experience of all—he will get to know himself. This is the most difficult of all things for modern man, who is so seldom alone, with time to think, and feel, and wonder.

I think he'll make it. The fact that he reads and tries to write poetry does not mean that he's a pantywaist who will be crushed by his first brutal encounter with life. This lad plays a rugged game of football last summer, he got as far as Mexico and wound up up fighting bush fires in B.C. before returning to school. He's sensitive, but tough.

But the important thing is not that he makes it. It is the fact that he is going, alone. We hear so much today about the desire of youth for conformity and security that it's refreshing to see the evidence refuted.

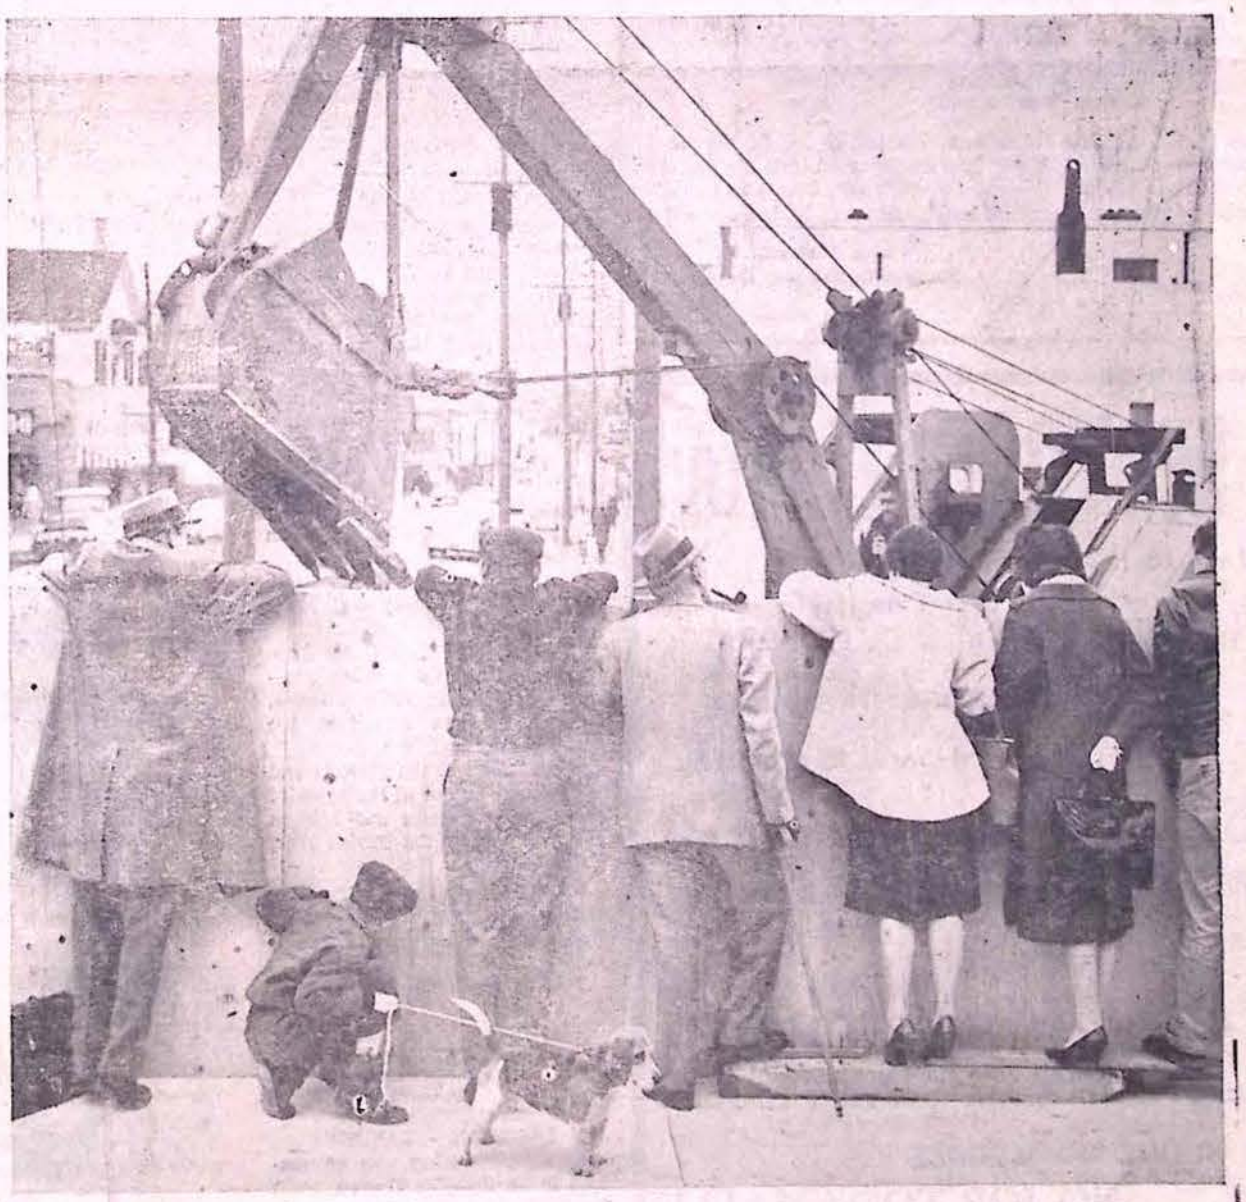

I do agree that today's youngsters seem to lack a spirit of adventure. But not the word "seem" I don't believe they really lack it. I think they are seduced away from it by over-protective parents; they are robbed of their initiative by having things made too easy for them.

* * * *

At any rate, I'll be going west, in spirit, with this young fellow and wishing I were twenty years younger, so that I could be riding with him. I have a special interest in him because I taught him English and encouraged him in his writing.

So I gave him a letter of introduction. It reads: "This will introduce Jim McKinnon, one of my Grade 12 students. Durng the year this student has never (a) pulled a switch-blade on me; (b) written an essay in which there were no spelling errors; (c) done anything of an ungentlemanly nature, while I was looking at him. Any favors tendered him would be appreciated by Bill Smiley."

There you are, Fair warning to my thousands of readers in the west. If a dusty, unshaven hobo with a bicycle appears at your door, or your newspaper office, and pulls out that letter, you have a chance to tell me off, by proxy. On the other hand, if you don't feel too hostile to me, don't be afraid to give him a cup of tea or a shakedown in the barn. He's a decent lad, and maybe someday he'll put you in a book.

WORK TOO HARD?

Because I had been away from my desk for a couple of weeks, work piled up. Two or three deadlines were right on top of me. I had faced this sort of situation before, so I didn't panic. I know how much can be done if a person forgets the clock. I launched an all - out attack.

The other morning, long after midnight, I went to bed. Nora heard me drop a shoe, and muttered crossly that I was working altogether too hard.

I suppose I should have sighed and played martyr. But the fact was that I felt like whistling a merry tune. I had broken the back of the work load and had that gay light feeling that comes to you when you are again on top of the situation instead of sagging beneath it.

There is a spring in my step again. When I am ahead of my work I feel good. It is when I get lazy and procrastinate and am threatened with onerous deadlines that I am half dead and suffering.

Perhaps there is such a thing as overwork. I don't know. But I will make a bet that it is only about half as destructive as under-work. It is when you get behind, when you are not dealing with the work as it comes at you, when you are loafing, that anxiety hits you beneath the breastbone.

But perhaps I do you; dear reader, an injustice. Maybe you work too hard..you fibber, you!
