Diary of a Vagabond

BY DOROTHY BARKER

CANADIAN CULTURE CULTIVATED

I have always been led to beleive that this thing called culture, which has become increasingly apparent across Canada in the last decade, was bought to our shores by the influx of immigrants from older countries in the world community; countries where theatre and art have been part of the ordinary individual's living pattern not just egg - head stuff for intellectuals.

This thought was exploded by a new Canadian who said she was infuriated every time she hears her own countrymen or others who become residents of our nation claim "Canada has no culture of its own". Elizabeth Macaulay is English; she is press representative for the Vancouver International Festival, and a more ardent booster for her adopted land it would be hard to find.

She was quick to point out the beauty of our native culture, the art of the Haida Indians, the Eskimos, the weaving skills of the women of Quebec and the maritimes, noted potters, artists, actors and musicians who, we both agree, had to first find fame abroad before they, for the most part, were acclaimed by their own people.

FESTIVALS NEED DONATIONS

"No festival can support itself without donations. No individual could bring the type of performer or production to the people that a festival does", remarked Miss Macaulay, in telling me something of the ups and downs of this artistic endeavor.

Vancouver is noted as a hostess city, one to which many tourists are attracted. Tourists expect to spend money for transportation and entertainment; they like to anticipate something original, amusing and enlightening. In the beautiful mountain and sea setting, with its constant succession of bloom and panorama of scenery, the Queen Elizabeth Theatre, now established home of the Festival, spreads its Auditorium and new playhouse, plus an attractive restaurant, over a square block in the heart of the city.

Luncheon with Miss Macaulay in the restaurant and a personally conducted tour of the theatre and playhouse by Eric Perth, Theatre House Manager, were highlights of our stay in this coastal city for Rickey (my grandson, who accompanied me on my recent jaunt west) and me.

Neither of us had ever been behind the scenes of a professional theatre of such size, 2800 sitting capacity. Though we were both impressed with the hydraulics that lower the orchestra pit, the fact that the stage is the second biggest in North America, and that the nine miles of cable, which operate the curtains and backdrops are operated by one man, it was the new smaller playhouse that had a great appeal for us both. This addition has made it possible for the Festival to take place in one area, rather than be spread all over the city as in former years.

This year there is a link with the Stratford Shakespearean Festival for its production of the Pirates of Penzance and Pinafore will be added features on the program. Another particularly interesting one -- a new venture -- is "Music at Six", planned for the pleasure of those employed in offices and stores.

A friend of mine once remarked that he thought culture is often a hard pill for some types to swallow. Surely not when it is as well sugar coated as it is by the numerous festivals being sponsored in various parts of Canada this summer.

INSTANT WORMS

Hilford J. Burton, the Pied Piper of Port Credit, demonstrated recently his amazing green fluid that makes worms leap out of the ground and beg to go fishing.

Mr. Burton, fiftyish, is a realtor and do-it-yourself hobbyist. Two years ago a grandchild spilled on the lawn a can of fluid X, which he had mixed for some hobby project.

"I was mad at the time," Mr. Burton told me. "But then I noticed all the worms in the area had come to the surface. I don't know anything about chemistry or worms but I worked to perfect it."

Now he has formed Instant Worms, Inc and is about to market the product.

"We're all very excited about it he said. "The worms don't just come up. They leap right out, lively and dancing. You can see the grass waving as they come out.

"I fish myself.

"When I need worms I just pick the nearest piece of lawn or humus soil—sand is no good. If there are worms there, they come out. It's better than spending all night with a flashlight. We've had failures but we've dug down and proved that there weren't any worms there anyway."

Reporter - photographer David Proulx investigated recently.

He picked a piece of Mr. Burton's lawn on Centre rd., Port Credit. Mr. Burton soaked the area four feet by three with the green fluid.

"Within 10 seconds we had our first worm," he reported.

"It popped up about an inch then wiggled out.

"Then they came up—about 20 in a couple of minutes. I picked two other areas. We got about 25 from the second and 35 from the third.

"Mr. Burton was apologetic. It had been raining hard and he said this was a poor crop because the rain diluted the fluid. But as I lfet worms wer still popping up all over the place."

Mr. Burton told me, "I think this is the finest thing that happened in fishing for a long time. It doesn't harm the grass at all. I'm hoping to develop a fluid that will bring out harmful grubs as well.

"I don't know how it works—but it does."

(Gordon Donaldson author of "Around the Town", which appears in a Toronto newspaper, wrote the above article which features a new chemical discovered by Hilford J. Burton, of Port Credit and a son of the late Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Burton of this town. In a recent news release from H. W. Liebig & Co., Ltd., it now appears that Mr. Burton's discovery known as "Instant Worms" is being distributed by H. W. Liebig & Co., Ltd., at Oakville, Ontario, on a Mail Order basis. For only $1.00 the company sends you a supply of ingredients and simple instructions. All you have to do is to dilute one package of "Instant Worms" in a bucket of water and pour the green looking solution on the land where you would normally expect to find worms. Congratulations Hilford on your discovery.—Editor.)

Sugar and Spice

By Bill Smiley

Just a few random thoughts this week. After all, you can't expect a fellow to turn out the deep thoughtful stuff that usually appears in this space, when he's on his holidays.

Holidays, he says. What is there about a relaxed - looking man that brings out the construction foreman in every woman? I haven't been so busy since I worked the midnight to noon shift on the lake boats, twenty years ago. I put the lawn chair out in the morning and never get near it again until it is time to put it away again at night.

Every time I turn around the old lady shoves a dishcloth, a grocery list or a rake into my hand. Every time I stick my nose out the door the kids descend on me, waving swimming suits, badminton racquets or cans of worms. Have you tried a zippy game of badminton with a 14 year old in the noonday sun lately, mac? Try it, and join me in the coronary ward.

And then there's the perpetual weeding. My wife put in some vegetables this year, and you'd swear that dismal little plot was the Garden of Eden, the way she watches it. Some puny weed dares stick its head up among her seven potato plants, and you'd think it was a rattlesnake at a Sunday school picnic, the way she goes after it.

I knew the whole thing was a mistake in the first place, and I told her so, when she was spading it up, but she paid no heed. So I let her do the weeding in the garden and I handle the weading ing the bathwoom.

Another great time consumer is the guest list. We spend hours trying to fit people in. When you live in vacation country, as we do this is just part of the annual summer deal. But it's rather alarming when you begin counting the number of people who are coming to visit you, and discover you're going to have a bigger turn-out than the nearest resort hotel.

We have been booked solid through July and have only a few vacancies in August. The kids haven't slept in their own beds for so long they feel, look, and act like vagrants. I'm never quite sure what woman is going to be getting breakfast when I come down in the morning.

There have been two novel and pleasant pastimes for the family this summer, however. In both of them we're about ten years behind the rest of the country, but that's the way we seem to operate in our family. We're so busy trying to keep up with the Smileys that we haven't time even to look around for the Joneses, let alone keep up with them.

The first of our new activities is outdoor cooking. A few years ago, we received a free barbecue set for buying ten gallons of gas, or something. We hadn't seen it since, but unearthed it while I was looking for my waders a few weeks back. It's about 18 inches high and ten in diameter, so we don't go in for roasting oxen, but have tried about everything else.

You should see the little family gathered for the evening ceremony. We don't fool around with those barbecue starters that you squirt on the charcoal. Father just throws some gasoline on it. Then he heaves a match toward it, and everybody hits the deck. Not one of the family has been blown up yet, our charcoal burns with a clear, pure flame, and it gives the food a certain exotic flavor.

What we like about it is that it saves us from having a big pile of dishes to do. One of these days, if I put too much gas on it, it's going to save us the trouble of eating too. However, the saving on dishes is dissipated during our other nocturnal dalliance which is watching television.

We finally bought a set last fall. probably the third last family in Canada to own one. But normally we're all too busy to watch the thing. Now we watch everything. Most people are sore because there's nothing on in the summer except re-runs, but it doesn't bother us. We didn't see any of them the first time they appeared.

There are only two drawbacks to this. Watching the box makes us all hungry. By the time the late movie is over, every dish in the house is in the TV room, and dirty. The second disadvantage is that my wife falls asleep in the middle of a dandy western, and knocks off about two hours in her

SOCIAL WELFARE

The City of St. Boniface has been criticized because it is making a serious effort to get the single men on its welfare list to get out and get jobs. One official said, "They can't find jobs in beer parlors."

He is so right. And that city is right in using stern methods to try to get these men to work. If all Canadians were content to lean on neighbors or the public coffers, we'd go down hill fast.

What the public wants and is entitled to is assurance that public welfare money is going to those who really need it. The idea of draining off from society a lot of money to be spent by idle men in beer parlors is galling to say the least.

Social welfare workers owe it to themselves to keep this thought before them at all times. If they ever let the public get the notion that they countenance the financing of loafers, faith in the entire structure of our public welfare work will be destroyed. Many excellent social workers do take realistic attitude and place a real value on the money they handle. There are a few, however, who seem to feel that anyone who grouses about spending hard - earned dollars on out - and - out loafers is a callous miser.

The good social worker should be just as interested in the welfare of all men as he is in the welfare of the indigents. He should try to give full value for every dollar spent, and try to save money for those of us who are working and supporting our families. Men who have never been on the public welfare roles often have serious financial problems they are trying to meet; and to rob them to support others in idleness without effort is all wrong.

I have seen a good deal of the social welfare work done by the Salvation Army. They are generous with understanding, inspiration, compassion; they are at the same time, scrupulously careful not to waste the money donated to them. Recipients soon know that their material needs will not be looked after in perpetuity unless a great effort is made to obtain work and to work on themselves at the same time.

This philosophy has won great respect for the Salvation Army. It could do the same for the very valuable and high-minded social workers of Canada. A soft heart need not mean a soft head; the two seldom go together. It is no favor to a man to leave him unchallenged.

P. E. I. FERRY SERVICE BETTER THAN EVER

MONCTON — Canadian National Railways' ferries will make more scheduled sailings between New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island this summer than ever before Howard C. Grayston, Atlantic region vice-president, announced recently.

The summer service, to be introduced calls for 34 crossings a day, 17 in each direction. This is six more trips than in 1961. Mr. Grayston said that trucks and automobiles would be handled on a "first come ,first served" basis this yea. In the past, trucks were handled on SS Scotia II, which has few facilities for tourists.

He added: "The Scotia II will not operate in scheduled service this summer. The Confederation, the Abegweit and the Prince Edward Island all have tourist facilities, and there is no longer any need to hold one vessel for trucks.'

The new summer services follows a record spring schedule of 20 crossings a day introduced April 16. Since June 29 the ferries sailed as follows:

Leave Borden: 6.40 a.m., 7.05 a. m., 7.55 a.m., 9.25 a.m., 10.05 a.m., 10.45 a.m., 11.45 a.m., 12.55 p.m., 1.35 p.m., 2.05 p.m., 3.45 p.m., 4.25 p.m., 5.30 p.m., 6.50 p.m., 7.15 p.m. 8.50 p. m., 9.35 p.m.

Leave Cape Tormentine: 5.55 a.. m., 6.30 a.m., 8.15 a.m., 8.40 a.m., 9.20 a.m., 10.35 a.m., 11.30 a.m., 12.10 p.m., 12.55 p.m., 2.20 p.m., 3.15 p.m., 3.50 p.m. 5.25 p.m., 6 05 p.m., 7.05 p.m. 8.25 p.m., 9.35 p.m.

In addition, the ferries will make unscheduled crossings during the night to handle freight traffic.

SAGA OF THE BLUENOSE

If you are worth your salt as a Nova Scotian, you are well acquainted with the Bluenose saga. And you see her likeness every day; it's on the back of the Canadian 10-cent piece. Bluenose was a ship, one of the most famous ever built in anada. She was a fishing and racing schooner, a sleek thoroughbred of a ship that outsailed everything in her class. In the '20s and '30s her name and that of her skipper, Captain Angus Walters, were known across Canada.

Designed by Wm. Roue of Halifax, and built in 1921 by skilled Nova Scotian craftsmen in the Smith and Rhuland yard at Lunenburg, the lithe, graceful queen of the Grand Banks became a legend in her own lifetime. "Old Storm-along" and "Old Weather Leg" she was nicknamed, and men who knew the sea said she was the greatest topmast schooner the world had ever seen. She won every series of races in which she was entered, against the fastest schooners on the North Atlantic, many of them created for the sole purpose of beating her.

For all her speed and sleekness Bluenose was a hard worker. In her first season on the Banks she brought in a record catch, and she

IS CANCER INFECTIOUS?

A great revival of interest has taken place recently in a dramatic and controversial theory: that cancer is an infectious disease. Should this theory prove true -- and more and more researchers feel that it will -- the dread disease may ultimately be conquered with vaccines.

In 1910 Dr. Peyton Rous, of the Rockefeller Institute, proved that a common sarcoma (cancer of the connective tissues) in chickens is caused by a virus. In the 1930's, a second spurt of activity in cancer-virus research resulted from experiments which proved that some types of cancer in mammels -- i.e., rabbits and mice -- also were caused by viruses. Then in the 1950's researchers were able to induce leukemia in newborn mice with a virus, and cause other varieties of cancer in mice with a second virus.

Most of the remaining resistance to the cance - virus theory -- and it still is considerable -- is based on two points. One is the fact that so many things seem to cause cancer: chemicals, radiation, chronic irritation, hormonal imbalance, smoking, air pollution. The second objection simply repeats the long-standing observation that mice and chickens, after all, are not men, and where is the proof that a virus has ever caused cancer in a human being?

In Uganda in 1958 Dr. Denis Burkitt called attention to the unusual frequency of malignant lymphoma among children there. Research revealed that the disease does not occur at altitudes above 5000 feet or in climates where temperatures fall much below 60 degrees Fahrenheit. The best present guess is that the disease is virus - caused, with the virus probably transmitted by an insect.

Teams from France, England and the United States are now working with Burkitt to see if they can find the insect and the virus -- if indeed they do exist -- which are responsible for making this strip of Africa a cancer area. If successful, these scientists will have proved for the first time a direct causal connection between a virus and human cancer.

If it can be proved that specific viruses definitely cause cancer, the more optimistic scientists feel certain that the answers about viruses will be in hand reasonably soon and that, when they are, an anticancer vaccine or vaccines will follow within a relatively few years.

served her owners well for 20 years in the fishing trade. Speed was a factor of success in Grand Banks fishing—the first ships into port got the best prices for their fish—and natural rivalry existed between the Nova Scotians and the New Englanders from Boston and Gloucester. In 1920 the International Fshermen's Races were begun, and the first race was won by Esperanto, a Gloucesterman. But the next year Bluenose was completed and she came out like a tiger, a bone in her teeth and bent on revenge. She won the race in 1921 and went on to beat all comers until her retirement as undefeated champion in 1938.

A few times, when not working or racing, the lady put on her best dress and went visiting. Captain Angus sailed her up to the Chicago Exhibition in 1933 and, in passing, offered to take on the best that Great Lakes yatchsmen could muster. "They went off in another direction when they saw what we could do," snorted Walters, but he retains fond memories of the warm reception given him during the excursion to the freshwater ports.

Two years later, she went to England for the jubilee of King George V and Queen Mary, and the king gave her a set of sails which had been intended for his own yacht. These were her best, happiest years.

But the chugging, chuffing trawlers and draggers — unromantic but efficient — eventually doomed the graceful schooners. In 1935, Bluenose suffered the indignity of having a pair of diesel engines fitted into her hold. They were removed temporarily two years later so that she could take part in her last great sailing race — an epic contest with her archrival, Gertrude L. Thebaud, the pride of Glouscester — but the handwriting was on the wall. In 1942, with her diesels again installed, she was sold to a west indies shipping company to be used as an inter - island tramp freighter, an ignominious role of the former queen.

Early in 1946, she ran on a reef off the coast of Haiti and sank. She lies there still, despite the efforts of some groups of loving Nova Scotians to raise her and bring her home.

Early this year, Captain Walters now retired and owner of a dairy in Lunenburg, proposed a fitting memorial to his beloved ship. Along with others he formed the Schooner Bluenose Replica Society whose sole purpose will be to finance a full scale duplicate of Canada's most famous sailing vessel. "The Bluenose is a tradition," he points out. "She brought honour to this country. She should be built while the fellows are still around who know how she should go." The original plans are available; designer Wm. Roue, now 81, is ready to go back to work; and the Lunenburg adze-men have shown that they still know their trade by recreating two years ago another famous ship, the Bounty, for a hollywood film company.
