Diary of a Vagabond

BY DOROTHY BARKER

QUEBEC BEWITCHES

hTere was no time to absorb much o fthe atmospher of Montreal as a taxi whisked me from the CN's Ceneral Station to Victoria pier. With barely fifteen minutes to catch a boat that was to float me along the St. Lawrence River to Murray Bay, my eyes were not on the impressive church sqires and towering skyline of this metropolis, but on my watch and the rab's speedometer.

When aboard safely it took me several minutes to get my equilibrium, collect my luggage and find my bearings. Soon I noticed the city was slipping into the dusk. Later the Isle of Orleans appeared on the horizon, and from then on for five days, I was completely enchanted by La Belle Province.

It has such "another world" atmosphere. The farm houses with their mansard roofs or quaint Normandy architecture, seem to have been settled in their surroundings for more years than history admits. The mountains, which are not rugged like the Rockies, but rubbed to a roundness by the glacial age, march along the river's shore in an undulating pattern of light and shade, height and valley. Dolphins or porpoises and small white whales cavorted in the pathway of the steamer. Their exercising was the only exertion we witnessed in this secene of tranquility as we sailed toward our destination.

Beyond Description

We arrived at the Manoir Richelieu to attend the annual meeting of the Canadian Weekly Newspapers ssociation and between buzz sessions, knowledgeable lectures and the super meals, we found time to explore the country that surrounds this extravagantly beautiful summer resort. More adjectives it deserves but unless one has the gift of apoet it is almost impossible to create an image of the area on this flat piece of paper.

But I shall try, for on an afternoon when the sun played hide and seek between cotton ball clouds, with its reflection on the river, I was driven for miles on a winding hilly road that connects a string of little towns from Pointe au Pic to St. Simeon and beyond, like a necklet of pearls lying on the bosom of the north shore.

With me, as the guests of E. A. Ouellet, were three women who were also attending the meeting. We drove in a rather hushed silence, now and then exclaiming over the beauty of an old seigniory farm, or pointing excitedly at a view breaking through the trees. I am sure we were all experiencing the same sensation. This was the birthplace of much of Canada's history and when we stopped to visit a little Protestant church on a point jutting out from a protected cove, Mr. Ouellet told us Jacques Cartier had named this very spot Port au Persil because of the abundance of wild parsley he found growing there.

We had to cros low land and a sandy beach to reach the church and one of our members, who had time to change from her high heeled pumps into more comfortable footwear for exploring nature's pathways, sat on a stump and removed her shoes and stockings. Nothing wasa going to deter her from the experience of visiting the small wooden structure. It was bought by Miss Rita Bourgoin when it became possible it would be torn down. Her father, the Rev. Sam Bourgoin, had been the congregation's minister and she has preserved and maintained the church as it was then, though services are now seldom held within its four walls. This is probably the only church in Quebec where a woman has played the organ in her bare feet. Inspired by the atmospher, she was oblivious of her deshabillet, while her companions hummed the hymn in reverence, honoring the memory of those who had worshipped beneath its roof.

by HENRY MANDER PAINT

(The author of this story and many others is a native of Port Hawkesbury and is a descendent of the prominent Paint family, who for many years carried on business in the Strait town. Descendants of Guernsey in the Channel Islands, the Paint family left Hawkesbury some years ago and took up residence in British Columbia. Orman Paint an employee of the C. N. R., resides in Sydney. Mr. Henry Mander Paint, resides in Montreal.)

"Do you remember the time we went through the St. Peters Canal into the Bras D'Or Lakes in Cape Breton,?" aasked MacTavish.

"Indeed I do," said O'Halleran. "Tis a grand sight, that beautiful sheet of water enclosed by the high hills with the purple haze on them like the Scottish Highlands."

"Then you'll mind the chap at Baddeck who told us all about Angus MacAskill, the Cape Breton giant?"

"Just that he stood seven and a half feet tall, weighed 400 pounds, and once lifted a 2,000-pound anchor on a bet!"

"Tis the very man! But did you hear him telling me of the special setting-up exercises by which Macskill bulit himself up to become the wonderful man he was when he had his full growth?"

"No, MacTavish. This I missed, being called away to attend some detail of unloading cargo."

"Mind you, I do not altogether believe the story. The man who told it to me had a twinkle deep down in his eyes such as a Highlander might have in talking to a Lowlander from Glasgow! It was a circumstantial story told with the deep earnestness of a man giving confidential advice to an old friend."

"Better refill your glasseswith rum punch before you begin," said aptain Tom.

"Aye", agreed MacTavish.

"Tis a splendid though", said O'Halleran.

After the time I speak of MacAskill, he was only sixteen or seventeen years old and far from reaching his full strength, though he stood head and shoulders above most men. It was then that the Skeet Club of Sydney decided to hold a monthly picnic during the summer and fall at his father's farm. Bears were very numerous in Cape Breton in these days and they sometimes attacked the cattle if they roamed too far into the woodlot on MacAskill's farm. So the members of the Skeet Club decided to bring along their guns and have a monthly bear hunt as well as a picnic.

'They did not fare too well at the hunting at first. For years they had practiced shooting at clay pigeons, or birds on the wing, until they had completely lost the

What qualities do young people want in a father? You'd be surprised. And then again, you might not. I found out the other day when I asked about 35 teenagers to list the traits which they considered would make up The modesty of their demands was almost pitable. All they want is someone with the looks and build of Rock Hudson, the morals of Sir Galohad, the loving kindness of St. Francis, the sense of humor of Stephen Leacock, and the bankroll of E. P. Taylor, to name only a few of the required attributes.

As I wrote down their suggestions, checking them one by one against my own characteristics, the hearty smile with which I had begun to write the list turned into a sick simper. .. ..

My wife has been telling me for years that I'm a lousy father, and I've been retorting: "I yam not. may be a lousy husband, but I'm a perfectly good father. Ask the kids."

And they, depending on whose side the treacherous young devils feel like throwing their weight, would answer: "He's not so bad, Mom, there must be lots worse fathers than Dad!" Or: "She's right, Dad, you're not much of a father."

But here was proof, from outside the family. I had only about four of the 39 qualities required by those teen-agers in The Ideal Father. It hurt. I won't deny it. For a moment I toyed, bitterly, with the notion of turning in my 16?year-old union card in the great society of BOOBS—the Benevolent Order Of Bewildered Slaves —whose membership is made up of the country's finest, its fathers.

Fortunately, as an old BOOB, I have great resilience. We come back faster than a cheque marked N.S.F. Just as I reached the bottom point in my disillusion, I remembered that we were discussing, not me, or any ordinary BOOB, but The Ideal Father.

"We needed it now, the bank said yes, so..."

Many a household purchase like this starts with a bank loan. People find that the simple, natural thing to do is to borrow where they save—at the local bank. In fact the chartered banks are the largest single source of consumer credit loans, both in number and value.

Through the years the chartered banks have made it increasingly easy for people to borrow, at reasonable rates, for almost any worthwhile purpose: the purchase of a car...a new home heating system...a son's or daughter's education...a family vacation...

Three out of four bank loans are to individuals for their personal credit needs. And the total amount of such loans has almost doubled in the past five years...further evidence of the way bank customers are relying more and more on their local branches for borrowing as well as for all other financial services.

WHEN MOTHER GETS SICK

In a large family, mother seldom gets so sick she stays in bed. It has to be a tough virus indeed to lay low, because there is so much to do that she cannot afford to be idle. Usually she takes a few aspirins, grits her teeth, and carries on. Once in a long while, however, the virus is so overwhelming that she must have a day or two in bed. Catastrophe is the name for it.

That's when the family finds out the thousand and one jobs that she takes in her stride. Brownie uniforms to press; leotards to wash; food to cook, shopping to do, floors to mop, dishes to wash — you name it, she does it.

During her incapacity, the husband, oldest daughter, and any available relative are pressed into service to keep the establishment barely running. Only the pressing day-to-day needs can be cared for and then not too well. As the hours go by th efamily begins to realize a little bit how much they have

Ramblings in the Past

By OLD TIMER

Shortly before Bishop Denault's visit Father Lejamtel had obtained a grant of land for the parish. This was probably an extension of the lot granted to Dr. Phelan. It consisted of 21 acres, with a length of 30 chains, 50 links and a width of 7 chains, 3 links. The map attached to the grant has the notation: "Grant 16 Mar. 1803 to Francis Lejamtel, clerk, pastor of the Roman Catholic Church, called Notre Dame, and Peter Babin, Charles Boudrot, Michael Boutin, hurch Wardens."

Apparently some dissension arose among the parishioners with reference to the building of the new presbytery, as Lejamtel reported to the Bishop in 1804. On 15 July 1804 Bishop Denault addressed a pastoral letter to the people of Arichat. This contained a severe reprimand to the people and threatened to deprive them of their priest if his orders were not carried out. He asked:

"What has happened to the Acadians of other days, the Acadians who would willingly have given their blood and their lives for the honour of their religion, and whose descendants now refuse to undergo a slight expense for the upkeep of their altars and the maintenance of their priests?"

This letter must have had the desired effect for in May 1805 Father Lejamtel reported to the Bishop;,

"Our Arichat parishioners have at last agreed to carry out the orders of his Lordship of Quebec. The church will soon be provided with all the vestments, etc., according to list left by His Lordship. Work is being done on the presbytery; the belfry has been postponed until next year but a bell has been ordered."

In 1806 Father Allain who had been in ill health (suffering from asthma) since 1788 retired to his "country house", probably in West Arichat, and from there in 1808 went to the Magdalean Islands to live with a nephew. In the spring of 1812 he proceeded to Quebec and entered the General Hospital. He died in that institution on June 19, 1812.

The census of 1811 shows that there were 1,703 persons living within the district of "Arichat, Little Arichat, Barre a Echoue, Petit de Gras, Upper part of Arichat, D'Escousse, River Bourgeois, Grand Digue, t. Peters and L'Ardoise. In the district there were 800 head of cattle, 1,302 sheep, 21 horses and 105 vessels. Father Lejamtel is showing as owning a cow and nine sheep, but no horse.

Bishop Plessis, successor to Bishop Denault, paid an official visit to Arichat in 1812, arriving on 28 July and leaving 4 August for Tracadie after being delayed a few days by fog. Due to the fear of privateers operating in the area the schooner on which he was travelling stopped at Bear Island, in the Strait of anso, and he proceeded from there to Arichat in a rowboat, by way of the available back channels. He describes Arichat and the activitties of the port in quite some detail. He also describes the church as well furnished with vestments and as having a steeple with two bells, "a rare thing in these parts". But surprisingly he does not mention Father Lejamtel, the local priest. However, the visit is confirmed but no details of it are given.

When Father Dufresne (appointed in 1812 to serve the districts of Margaree and Cheticamp) was drowned on the way to his pastorate, Father Lejamtel again gave his services to these districts, spending six weeks on the trip, from the first week of July to 25 August. He took care of this mission for the next 15 months before replacement relieved him.

In 1813 Father Lejamtel decided that he might find some candidates for the priesthood among his parishioners. Over a period of five years he selected four boys who were zealously taught Latin by the pastor, but all four gave up the idea of entering a seminary. In April 1817 he wrote to the Bishop expressing his opinion "That the people of Arichat had no zest for study and that none of the boys was adapted to going to college."

In 1815 Bishop Plessis paid his second official episcopal visit to Arichat. He arrived on 16 June aboard the schr. "Resolution", Fougere, master. In his Journal he gives a detailed description of the harbour and vicinity, praises the exemplary lives of the pepole engaged in the fishing and inshipbuildng, but deplores the laxty of those whose ambitions have lured them to the coastal trade. The Bishop remained in Arichat until 19 June when he left for a tour of the remaining missions on Cape Breton Island.

Bishop Plessis while visiting Sydney met Major General Swaine, commanding the Artillery Guards. He wrote in his Journal:

"Sydney has a garrison of about 200 men. They lodge in a two-storey wooden barracks which is the finest edifice in a city which has nothing fine. A good fort with 20 pieces of artillery guards the place. It was under the command of Major General Swaine who was most courteous towards the Bishop and his priests. Although this officer is a Protestant he holds Father Lejamtel in very high esteem, and he spoke of him in very flattering terms to the Bishop on the occasion of the latter's first courtesy visit."

By 1815 Father Lejamtel was again quite busy. Besides his work in Cape Breton he did what he could for the Acadians stttled in the districts of Larry's River, Charlos Cove, Port Felix and Tor Bay. He had been relieved of the care Cheficampg and Margaree in 1814 but he still looked after the Indians at Chapel Island and the Acadians at Little Bras D'Or, who due to laxity, were not responding as well as he expected. Details of the conditions in this mission are found n his letters to the Bishop dated October 1815, May 1816, October 1816 and April 1817.

Activities at Arichat claimed the greater part of his time. On 17 December 1816 he wrote:

"We have enlarged our church by building up to the level of the wings the two corners to the right and left of the altar. The work was completed last week. The pews of this addition are to be sold at auction on Monday, the 20th inst."

Four months later he wrote: "the sale of pews in the addition to our church brought in 30 pounds and some shillings. I made to the fabric fund a donation of 400 pounds which they still owed me, since I saw very well that they would not be able to pay me."

The LIBERAL PLAN for MEDICARE

The Liberal Party stands for the establishment, in co-operation with the Federal Government, of a government sponsored, pre-paid, medical care programme. Such a programme obviously cannot be fully implemented at once.

However, a new Liberal Government will institute a plan immediately to give medical care to the needy.

This will be done by a government contribution (in full in some cases) towards the cost of comprehensive medical coverage, for certain low-income groups, purchased from recognized organizations providing medical insurance.

EARL W. URQUHART, Q.C.
Leader of the Liberal Party of Nova Scotia

This Programme:

(a) will be entirely voluntary and free from any government regimentation or interference with individual rights and responsibilities;

(b) will preserve inviolate the doctor-patient relationship necessary to a high standard of medical care;

(c) will employ the insurance principle as the means of equalizing the cost of medical services;

(d) will maintain the responsibility of the individual in providing for his medical requirements, with the province assuming a responsibility to assist financially to the extent necessary to bring medical services within the reach of low-income groups without serious financial sacrifice.

leaned on mother. If the illness goes on for any length of time, hired help must be brought in. Nobody but a mother would do all the things that needs doing unless paid a handsome fee.

Wives contribute more to the family fortunes than the husbands do. Most men work short hours nowadays, and have it relatively easy on the job. Automation and fringe benefits hve made work a picnic. Wives continue to work long hous for low — or no — pay.

Yet, when the husband dies, the family fortune, if it amounts to anything at all, is set upon by the tax collectors. They forget that the wife was responsible for most of the savings. If the husband has been able to provide a pension, the collectors capitalize it and make the widow pay a hefty tax. Indeed she may even pay on money she'll never receive!

It seems to me that each Minister of Finance should be forced to spend at least one week as a substitute mother in the home of a large family. He would then realize the extent of the marraige partnership, and the contribution made to it by the mother. I think he would go back to his office determined to reform the Estates Tax Act to give widows — or widowers — treatment that is somewhate more Christian than they are receiving today.

Imemediately, I brightened. As I looked back over my life, I realized that I had never been an Ideal child, student, fighter pilot, prisoner of war, weekly editor, columnist or school teacher.

I admotted to myself that I had been a disappointing child, a lazy student, a frightened fighter pilot, a happy prisoner of war, a slapdash weekly editor, a columnist by sheer accident and a school teacher because there was a shortage of same.

And as I pondered the matter further, I remembered that most of the epople whom I had considered Ideal in these various capacities, over the years, had been a sharp pain in the arm, and, moreover, hadn't had one-quarter of the fun I'd had.

So cheer up, fellow-BOOBS. It doesn't matter whether you are kind, considerate, thoughtful, loving, generous, rich or well-groomed.

Be honest, Dads. Do you really care whether you wear the pants, whether you are industrious, ambitious, intelligent and brave? Does it pain you that you are not good-looking, sports-loving, steady, reliable, a pillar of the community, and "full of fun"?

Don't give it another thought. Those teen-agers are jst like us—dreamers. We'd like our childsen to be Ideal—polite, obidient, clever, handsome, quiet, thougnful, kind, decent, thrifty and so on.

We'll have to accept our kids just as they are. And a good thing, too. Who, after all, wants to be an Ideal anything.

THE BARE FACTS

knack of hitting anything on the ground.

'By this time Angus was friends with everyone in the Club for he was apleasant, obliging lad who stood head and shoulders above the tallest member..and some of the members were not small men!

It was Angus, who saw what the trouble was, and why they had so little success with their bear hunt. The answer to their problem was simple. They needed someone to throw the bears up into the air for them!

"Once this was decided, things went bzetter. When a bear was flushed out of the woods Angus would grab it and throw it a few feet skyward, leaping to one side and crouching down close to the ground. Soon there was a great shortage of bears in the district. But Angus had benefitted greatly from the wholesome erercise, and went on to become the grand man we read about.

"Such was the story this fine old man told me as one who unbosoms his heart's secrets to a friend," said MacTavish.

"We'll drink to that, eh Capt. Tom" said O''Halleran. "Ah, MacTavish, how you have preserved your innocence all these years."

"Tis been a struggle, sailing with you these twenty years as engineer," said MacTavish finishing his drink, and looking wistfully at Capt.. Tom, and the pitcher of punch.

Those who attain to any excellence commonly spend life in some one single pursuit, for excellence is not often gained upon easier terms.
