THE COCKTAIL PARTY

We went to a cocktail party during the holidays. In fact, we went to four of them. In fact, we even had one ourselves.

And, after judicious consideration, I state citegorically that there is no form of entertainment, self - abuse, penance or punishment that comes reasonably close to the cocktail party for sheer ridiculosity.

Once upon a time, I suppose, a cocktail party was a genteel affair, a gathering at which friends sipped a drink, discussed the arts and nibbled a canape or two, before going off to dinner somewhere. Urbane, sophisticated, the manners as polished as the glasses.

Nowadays, the cocktail party is a social monster with 44 tails and one great big fat head.

First, there's the guest list to prepare. This is a lot of fun, and takes only three weeks. It is interspersed with remarks like, "What the hell did they ever do for us?"; and, "Well, you may think she's terrific, but I can't stand her."

The list includes the names of all the people you "owe" hospitality to. This means the couple who took you for a ride in their crumby boat last summer and soaked you to the skin in the process. And the neighbors who called you over for charred spareribs one evening when their expected guests had enough sense not to turn up.

Also all the people who invited you to one of their cocktail parties during the last three years, and the couple who sent you a Christmas card and whom you had cut off your list, and the people down the block who looked after your dog the day you were at the weddong, and the couple you don't know but look "interesting."

You now have eleventy-seven names on your list. So you start scratching. This too is fun. Joe and Mabel are given the axe because Joe always gets stoned. Miriam and Elmer go down the drain because Miriam always starts a fight just because Elmer is a bit of a girl-squeezer.

Then there's the booze problem. This produces an agonizing session of elementary mathematics, which results in a reasonable figure, which you then double.

And then there's the food business. Food at a cocktail party used to be a matter of a few hors d'oeuvers, but now it's a horse of a different color. Nobody who has gone to the trouble of getting a baby sitter and putting on his best suit at five o'clock in the afternoon has any intention of going home until he has eaten about five dollars worth of the only can of smoked oysters you've ever bought in your life.

But these are all on the surface, by-product kicks. The real delight of the cocktail party, as we all know, is the conversation. Where else do the girls get a chance to bare their souls almost as thoroughly as their bosoms? Where else can you hear a chap tell the same story he told at the last three cocktail parties, and tell it even beter?

When I started writing this column, I was feeling a bit jaded, a trifle critical of the cocktail party. But during the process I have come to realize that there's nothing quite like it in modern society. Nothing.

Unless it might be throwing lions to the christians.

LEGION HALL BURNS

The Legion Hall owned by Branch 150 Canadian Legion, Petit De Grat, was totally destroyed by fire recently. This building was located near Petit De Grat Bridge and was established shortly after the war. We understand that a new Hall will be built in Arichat. This was decided at a recent meeting of the members.

The Legion Hall at Petit De Grat became a very popular meeting place for Members and Club always well conducted and managed by Mr. Albert Forgeron, the capable caretaker.

Education in the Fishing Industry

By Hon. Allan J. MacEachen
(Minister of Labour)

The federal government and the Department of Labour are deeply interested in manpower development and in technical education.

As tangible evidence of this, federal assistance and participation in the development and operation of technical training programs has increased sharply over recent years.

In 1959 — 60 the federal government's share of the jont federal - provincial training programs was around $8,000,000. This year federal contribution, it is estimated will be close to $200,000,000.

We are very much aware of the need for technical and vocational education and training and perhaps even more important, we are keenly aware of the need to train, retrain and upgrade adults, not just because of demands of the modern technology, but also to meet rapidly changing social and economic conditions in the world.

The Federal — Provincial Relationship

The responsibility and in fact the autonomy relating to the establishment and operation of suitable education facilities rest, of course, with each province. It is now, however, generally recognized that there are broader interests and needs of the country as a whole which can only be served by a co-ordinated and integrated manpower development plan.

This is an area in which the federal government is in a position to accept responsibility. An important part of this is to help ensure that all our citizens have, as far as possible, an equal opportunity to develop their full potential vocationally.

Through the Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act, and the federal-provincial agreements, we are encouraging the development of technical and vocational programs at all levels below university education and are participating in the operational costs of a wide variety of programs for youths and adults.

The agreements in addition, provide for the reimbursement of provincial expenditures to build and equip the facilities necessary to carry on and expand these programs. Federal aid is now given at the rate of 75 percent for these capital projects and this arrangement will continue until at least April of 1967 under certain conditions. You are probably aware that the federal government has, in less than three years, agreed to share in 265 new schools and 188 major additions or alterations to existing schools, costing more than one half of a billion dollars.

Under the training agreements you will also be interested to know that the federal government has and can share in allowances paid by the provinces to trainees under most programs. I should add that these allowances are paid only when it is clearly demonstrated that they are really necessary in order that the trainee may be able to attend a course in which he is genuinely interested and for which he is suited.

Fisheries Training

Technical and Vocational Schools and the programs which operate within them exist to serve individual Canadians, to serve the need of our growing economy and to serve the industries which are the fabric of our economy.

I do not need to stress to you the importance of the fishing industry nor dwell on its place in the Canadian economy.

It is clear through in the light of recent studies there is an apparent need for further federal-provincial co-operation, among Department of Fisheries, Education and Labour particularly, to expand and improve training for this industry.

It also stems that there is need to develop courses at the operator, the skilled tradesman and the technical levels for youth and adults. Tht federal Department of Labour is prepared to co-operate with the fishing industry and to assist in the development of more training activity in this field.

Background — What has been done in Fisheries training during the last five years?

The provinces have already established different forms of fisheries training programs in response to the most urgent requirements in this field. These courses have been given under different programs and usually by, or in close co-operation with, the Departments of Fisheries.

Both centralized and decentralized facilities have been used by the provinces and in most cases the costs have been shared by the federal Department of Labour. It is evident that in order to meet urgent needs for training in a population where fishermen are interspersed amongst the labour force at the rate of one to every sixty workers a decentralized system may be necessary although not always the most efficient.

Short courses, usually provided as a form of extension work rather than in school training, have been given in close cooperation with the Department of Fisheries and with the provinces. These have been supported financially under the Training Agreements.

These courses of varying duration have included subjects such as Community Stages, Fishermen training, Net and Gear, Special Navigation Courses, Marine engines, and General Seamanship.

They have been conducted as evening classes or as full-time day classes and have been located in Fisheries schools or in other premises where itenerant instructors could assemble a group of students.

These courses have been designed mostly for adult fishermen in order to raise their skill and technical knowledge and make them more efficient in their occupation.

"Good! I'll send you my cheque today!"

Most people today pay for goods or services by cheque —because most people have a bank account. It's the simple, safe way to transfer money to any person at any time.

The next cheque you put in the mail, or cash at any branch of a chartered bank, will be one of one billion that pass through the banking system each year. These familiar slips of paper represent 90 per cent of all financial payments made today, and their fast, efficient handling by the chartered banks is essential to bank customers, indeed to the whole economy of the nation.

To handle the ever-increasing flow of cheques—and to maintain standards of efficiency in the clearings—the chartered banks have introduced magnetic ink encoding to be used in high-speed electronic sorting. This new method, called MICR, makes possible a faster, more accurate service to customers, and maintains your chequing account as one of the cheapest, most convenient basic banking services.

SMOKING AND HEALTH

The British and Canadian Medical Association said it, and so did a number of Cancer Societies, so the report of the U.S. Surgeon General was really nothing new to us as we had heard most of it before. However, true to fashion, just because the United States came up with the idea why it was heeded when the others were more or less frowned upon.

The report states that the link between cancer and cigarettes has been established. It also points smoking as a cause of chronic bronchitis and coronary artery disease.

It is, of course, much easier to accept the diagnosis than it is to find a cure. Most of us around middle age remember the nation wide campaign against drinking, a disease far worse in many respects than cigarettes. No one again wants the evils of probition and to use the same campaign against cigarettes would be really a laugh.

This, of course, does not mean that something shouldn't be done about it. It is far easier said than done to give it up, and now the scientists tell us that some of the drugs used and sold on the market to curb or stop smoking are far more harmful than the cigarettes themselves. People especially youngones, should be told of the dangers of cigarettes and excessive smoking. Possibly the tobacco companies should cut down on the manufacturing of cigarettes and turn more to the production of pipe tobacco and cigars. However they tell us that excessive pipe smoking causes lip cancer. In other words we can't win.

In closing, we think of a number of our friends who have died with cancer of the lungs and heart ailments who never in their lives used tobacco. One is inclined to believe the heavy rise in respiratory ailments could be due to the dirty air we have to breathe, as pure air is now in many places almost non-existent and the smell of car exhause fumes makes one cough more than inhaling cigarette smoke.—Wolfville Acadian.

WHEN IS MUSIC A FOLK SONG?

What is a "folk song"? Some might argue this resurgance of story telling ditties sung to the accompaniment of a guitar had its rebirth because singers like Burl Ives or Harry Bellafonte, chose to chase a blue - tail - fly musically or pine for a yellow bird in song. How, one might ask, has folk music attained such great acceptance and what promise does the future hold for the folk music fan?

Duncan Emrich, one time curator of folk Archives in the United States Library of Congress once commented in a letter he wrote to Saturday Review, "The theory of 'communal creation' of ballads has been throughly exploded for several decades. At its point of origin, each folk song is the creation of an individual."

ORIGINATES FESTIVAL

Dr. Louise Manning sat behind a littered desk in a room crammed to the ceilng with books, reference files and previous Maritime Data, when I visited her last summer at "The Old Manse", boyhood home of Lord Beaverbrook. She is librarian in this well preserved old residence where Beaverbrook lived during his father's tenure as Presbyterian minister and which he has since purchased and presented to the town of Newcastle New Brunswick, for library purposes.

Instigator, organizer and general factotum, Dr. Manning can be credited with much of the success AND the organization of the "Folk Song Festival" held each year for the past several summers and which was resurrected literally hundreds of ballads.

Dr. Manning, whose enthusiasm for folk music is unbounded, has collected hundreds, selecting the best for a volume entitled, "Folk Song Collection of Miramichi Songs". She appears on radio regularly to give voice to folk song lore, play folk records and keep alive festival enthusiasm from one event to another. Many now travel from the New England States to compete for awards such as "Singer who has come the longest way" or "one with the best memory". But it is the Canadian Maritimer with his songs about contraversy, politics, love or the weather that appeals so strongly to the hundreds of tourists who attend each summer.

Across the nation, coffee clubs in cellars and attics have sprung up where the dolefull, or sometimes even gorey ballads are sung through the smoke and haze of these dingy surroundings. The clientele is mostly very young, though now and then one may spot among listeners, the seamy face of an old salt who has listened to sea chanties on the bounding main sung by weathered sailors who have created their own words sung to a wierd liting tune.

What is a "folk song?" It is chanty, balled, calipso, and are they born and reborn from a state of upheavel? Not even the experts are prepared to surmise. But Dr. Manning can be pretty sure the crowds will be here next summer, both to sing and to listen to haunting native folk melodies.

Membership reported that she had a letter regarding the banner and that we could not get it without the letters as ordered. She had sold all the league pins and wanted to know if she could order a dozen more. Press reported that she had sent articles to the Casket and local press. She wanted to know how many members wear the League pins.

IN MEMORIAM—In loving memory of my dear Dad, Edward Mauger, who passed away on November 21, 1963.

May you always walk in sunshine,
And God's love around you flow
For all the happiness you gave me
No one will ever know,

It broke my heart to loose you,
But you did not go alone,
For part of me went with you
The day God called you home.

Deep in my heart you'll always stay
Loved and remembered every day,
Sadly missed and never to be forgotten.

Education in the Fishing Industry

Somewhat more extensive courses lasting from one to several months have also been given in centralized schools by itinerant instructors on subjects such as Coastal Pilotage, Seamanship, Net Work, Electrical equipment Maintenance, Ship cooking, First Aid Masine Engineering, Navigation, Boat Building, Marketing and Accounting.

These courses, given for the most part during the winter months have been designed for adults already engaged in fishing but also to some extent, for young people interested in entering the industry.

They have been operated primarily along the coasts of Newfoundland, New Brunswick and British Columbia. They have been given also in Nova Scotia, Quebec, Ontario and occasionally in the prairie provinces.

The most recent development is the establishment of permanent centres or schools for Fisheries training. These schools are being well equipped; they have a permanent teaching staff and group together students who have a common interest in Fisheries. Some of the most important schools are located in Pictou, Nova Siotia, Caraquet, New Brunswick and Grand Riviere, Quebec, and of course the recently organized College of Fisheries, Marine Engineering, Navigation and Electronics in St. John's Newfoundland. In areas bordering navigable waterways, there have been advanced courses given in the field of navigation especially for D. O. T. certification of ship's officers, masters and mates. These courses have served a dual purpose and students have been going to the Fisheries Industry as well as into general shipping industry.

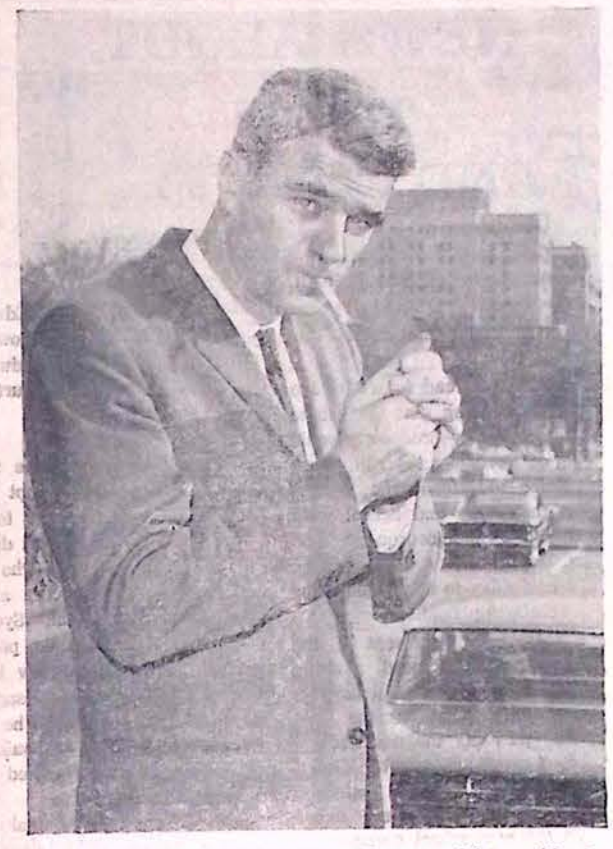

The Prospects and the future

At the request of the federal Department of Fisheries and in order to help develop courses adapted to our present fisheries industry, the department of Labour has undertaken recently, a structural analysis of the industry, identifying the occupational functions and level of training needed for efficient performances in these occupations.

Four main activities have been identified within this industry. The analysis has separated the functions inherent in ship or fleet operation as required in the catching of the fish, the processing of the fish, including the fish by-products the business administraton and finally in the marketing and distribution of the products.

It is the intention of the Department of Labour to continue these analysis related to training in cooperation with the fishing industry and to help the provinces develop the most suitable training program as quickly as possible, particularly for the wide range of occupations represented in Fisheries below the professional level.
