SUGAR and SPICE

By Bill Smiley

THE IMAGE HAS CHANGED

As the school year draws towards its close, I can't help looking back on the past 10 months, my first hitch as head of the English department in our factory with a mingling of amazement and amusement.

I am amazed that I have not gone down for the third time in a sea of paper. There were times when I rose to the surface only long enough to gulp a breath of ink, before being swept under by another wave of essays, or book report forms, or memos.

My amusement stems from another source — the old-fashioned image of the English teacher. There just ain't no such thing as a modern image of same.

For many years the image of the English teacher was fairly concrete.

It was that of a wispy, gentle spinster of either sex, wholly dedicated to the written word. The only person in town who actually read poetry. Some kind of a nut who actually believed Shakespeare was thrilling theatre.

When I hold up that image beside the gallery of characters who taught English in my department this year, I chortle. There isn't ever the most remote resemblance.

Let's see, now. There's Jack, a vast young man of great good nature and courtly manner, who is a dead ringer for Henry VIII on one of the latter's good days. He's a beer drinker, a collector of antiques and a former advertising salesman.

There's Mac a former golf pro. He's also an ex-bus driver, ex-house painter, ex-airman. He's an inveterate punster who writes some pretty funny stuff. As witness our production this year of his masterpiece, "Julius Seize'er" in which the principal character was Dr. Bladder from Gaul.

There's Jeannette, five-foot-nothing, 98 pounds of doe-eyed French Canadian, who spent the first six months trying to convince the other teachers she was not one of the students, who can pin a six-foot 200-pound lout into paralyzed petrified panic with one flash of those eyes.

There's Geoff, the young Englishman who came here after a year of teaching in a good English grammar school. He planned to spend a year in Canada, as a lark. He was horrified at the free and easy attitude of our teenagers. He was apalled at our materialism and love of comfort. Now he has a car on the never-never plan, and is beefing about his salary. In short, he's become a typical Canadian.

We also have a gal who graduated in music, a former ambulance driver, an ex-chartered accountant, a dream-shattered social worker, and a lady who got sick of housekeeping.

Not only do these birds not fit the old image of the English teacher; they don't fit the new one either. There's not a beard in the bunch, an esthete in the ensemble, a pansy in the patch.

And not one, thank goodness is dedicated to the teaching of English. None shivers in ecstasy over a sonnet, bursts into tears over the beauty of an ode. But I daresay my polyglot, hardworking crew has taught the kids more about English and about life than many an old gal whose idea of heaven was to make a journey to England and stand in reverence before tne graves of the poets.

Thomas Boyle - A Man with a host of Memories

By BARBARA HINDS

Soldier. Builder. Stipendiary magistrate. Timber cruiser. School teacher. Farmer.

You name it and 73-year-old Cape Bretoner Thomas Archibald Boyle, now of Halifax, has been it.

Mr. Boyle has had a mixed career, ranging the North American continent from coast to coast.

He has sailed into the sub-Arctic and walked out of it. He served in the Canadian Army, helping to occupy conquered Germany in 1919. And he has found lifelong friends among titled aristocracy in Britain.

He has witnessed two gigantic financial fiascos, and he has helped to build the first grain elevator constructed in Halifax — that was in his concrete-mixing days, back in the 1920's when the world slump swallowed fortunes and ruined financiers threw themselves from skyscrapers.

He was born of sound Scottish stock in 1890 in West Arichat, Richmond County, and with his fiery red hair and high spirits, he soon earned a nickname — Tom Bull. "It was because I reddened some of their noses for them," he said speaking of his school days in Cape Breton.

When his school days ended he went back to the schoolhouse in Cape Breton as a schoolteacher, like his father before him but he did not stay long in the job.

He earned only $190 a year, and tales of money to be made building Fort Nelson lured him to the sub-Arctic, where he worked as a store keeper for the Canadian Northern Railway where the Nelson River spills into Hudson Bay.

He sailed from Halifax in 1914, in the Durley Shine and spent two years at Fort Nelson, formerly destined to be the grain port from which Prairie wheat would be shipped to Europe.

About $25,000,000 was spent abortively on building port facilities that were hardly ever used. Cost of a single suction dredger was $1,000,000, said Mr. Boyle.

ROCK RIVER BED

It was launched into the Nelson River down which the grain was to come in sternwheelers.

But surveyors with a bureaucratic blindness had omitted to not the river bed was impenetrable rock, and when the top layer of sand was dredged from it the river was still to shallow to be usefully navigable.

The whole project was moved North and the railway terminated at Churchill.

Churchill is a port which still takes its toll of grain carriers today in the shallow waters of Hudson Bay.

"It was a grand idea, but a terrible location," said Mr. Boyle, recalling the time he spent in the north, in the days before insect repellants and when the flies "swooped down on you, bit a chunk of flesh, and flew up into the trees to chew it."

When he left Fort Nelson in 1916, it was May and he walked out — alone. "It was easy to follow the trail until it thawed," said Mr. Boyle recalling his lone journey, following the packed snow trail used by dog teams, down to the railhead and thence to Winnipeg.

JOINED ENGINEERS

After a brief trip with a brother to Alaska roadbuilding he joined the Royal Canadian Engineers and was on the Western Front in the last assaults of the First World War. He helped to occupy Germany, made life-long friends among the occupied people and returned to Canada via England.

Next enterprise was at Anticosti where he was a timber cruiser — selecting good timber in the forests.

In 1928, the price of lumber went down. He recalls seeing a million cords of wood set adrift on the tides of the gulf of St. Lawrence.

Fine pulp wood piled itself 20 feet high on the Gaspe shores. "The price went so low, it was cheaper to cut it at Three Rivers than to ship it from Anticosti," said Mr. Boyle.

Then he turned to the job of concrete foreman and helped to build the first grain elevator in Halifax. It still stands today — a monument to his sound work.

LAID SIDEWALKS

He helped to lay the sidewalks of the city in the 1930s and recalls the days when most pedestrians, and there were lots of them, trod their way on earth and dirt.

Some of the first sidewalks on Oxford Street were laid by Mr. Boyle.

From time to time he went back to teaching.

In 1933 he was teaching school at Herring Cove when his pupils were "big galoots" old enough to be at work, "but there were no jobs for them, so they came to school. There wasn't much for the girls those days but to get married," he said.

Both Mr. Boyle's parents were school teachers, as were seven of their children. Teachers' conditions today are vastly improved since the last century, he says.

His father brought up his family on the government salary of $20. a year plus 25 cents, per month from each pupil and they could not always afford that.

Mr. Boyle never married. Today he lives in retirement with a school teacher sister at 6440 Seaforth Street ,with a garden, good health and a host of memories.

(The foregoing taken from the Chronicle-Herald, will be of interest to our readers and more especially to Mr. Boyle's friends on Isle Madame. A son of the late Mr. and Mrs. Doogald Boyle, of West Arichat, he received his early education here and as a teacher and various other occupations he was most successful and now in his well-deserved retirement we join with his relatives and friends in wishing him continued good health and happiness.—Editor.)

Diary of a Vagabond by Dorothy Barker

We Sell our Gas. Why Not More Water?

It has been some time since the two governments of Canada and the United States started negotiations for the Columbia River development project. Hardly had the ink dried on newspaper headings announcing that the B.C. ad Federal Governments had found the solution to their disagreement and the treaty between the two countries was about to be signed, when I discovered a news item in the Christian Science Monitor that had eluded me in our own Metropolitan dailies.

Perhaps I am aware of water problems and those of potential power developments because of my exposure to such gigahtic undertakings as the Grand Rapids project in northern Manitoba and the earth rolled dam in Saskatchewan. I wrote about them two summers ago.

To the south of us there are states starving fr water. Now an imaginative proposal has been made by a Los Angeles firm to develop North American water resources on a massive scale. And because most of the water the Parsons Company visualizes for their project has sources in Canada, I am going to quote directly from the article.

"It, (the Parson's Plan), would meet much of the continent's foreseeable water needs for 100 years including those of northern Mexico.

"It would pay for itself in half that time at an estimated cost, including financing of $100 billion.

"It would make possible eight times as much new irrigated land in Mexico as the Aswan High Dam will be giving Egypt.

"It would give extra water to two Canadian provinces, Alberta and Saskatchewan, as well as big blocks of power clear across Canada to Quebec.

"It would double California's water supply, give large additional supplies to Texas and to the mountain states and even send some to the Eastern Seaboard.

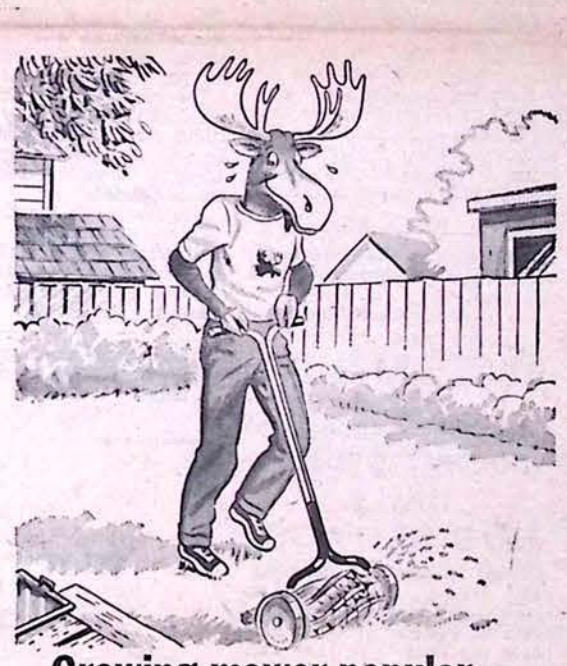

"It would increase by 50 per cent the hydroelectric power output of Niagara Falls, lifting the water level of the Great Lakes in the process.

"It might, indeed, open up the Northwest Passage that history says was a lodestar to the exploration of this continent and make transcontinental ship navigation really possible.

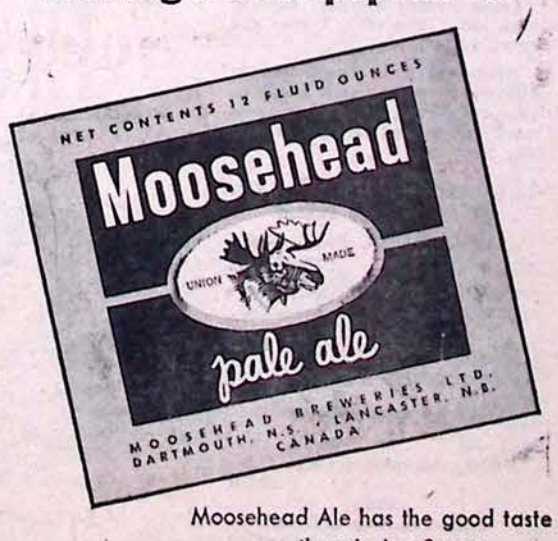

Reservation Proposed

"Briefly, the plan would con-

STEADY DOES IT

Returning home from a trip I found a workload that looked impossible. Frantic to meet deadlines I began batting at all jobs simultaneously, and making about as much progress as a locomotive with each wheel going in a different direction.

After a day of this hectic activity ,and a tossing night of worry, I remembered something.

My Dad, years ago, had an expression. Whenever he'd see us cramming late for exams or pumping into a job of wood piling in a slaphappy way he'd cautfon us with that expression, "Steady does it."

So I slowed down a bit. I called one place to ask if my deadline could be extended a couple of days. "Sure..we set it a bit early because most writers miss deadlines. You don't, but giving an early one is regular practice here." I thanked the gent and breathed easier.

Then I took the most pressing job and did it; then the next. Pretty soon, the desk was clearing And lo and behold, the deadline I had postponed no longer needed postponing. I sent the manuscript by mesenger, with a note explaining that I'd been able to get more done than I'd expected, but again expressed thanks for the patience. Pretty soon the phone rang. "Well you kept your reputation and made an editor feel good for being patient," he said.

I've just been reading the paper and noted, with a smile, that they are having another go at the Canada Pension Plan. Seems to me they'd have had the problems solved long ago if they hadn't jumped at the task so hectically to gain political advantage or out of sheer humanitarian zeal. Governments are slow because they try to be so fast. The Chinese had an expression for it, but I can't recall it right now. If you can't either, you're welsome to my Dad's.

Great opportunities come to all, but many do not know they have met them.

BRIAN MEAGHER DEPUTY MINISTER

A Canso native who started commercial fishing at the age of 14 and bought his own lobster boat a year later has been appointed Deputy Minister of Fisheries for Nova Scotia.

The appointment of Brian I. Meagher as Deputy Minister of the new Department of Fisheries has been announced by Hon. E.A. Manson.

Mr. Meagher, 51, has been Director of the Fisheries Division, Department of Trade and Industry since November 1954.

"We are fortunate that we will have as Deputy of the new department a man who has had 36 years' experience in the fisheries industry," said Mr. Manson.

"The knowledge Mr. Meagher gained during his career in the inshore and offshore fisheries, in small boats and large vesels, and in marketing and education, has contributed much to the industry.

Mr. Manson said Mr. Meagher had played a leading role in introducing new methods and encouraging new modernization of Nova Scotia's fishing fleet.

Born in Canso, Guys. County, in 1913, Mr. Meagher received his early formal education there. At the age of 14 he started commercial fishing and followed this occupation fr nine years.

During this perid he was active in community development and played a prominent part in organizing lobster marketing.

He spent two years deep sea fishing out of Gloucester and Boston, Mass., and Prtland, Maine, aboard large diesel trawelrs.

He was offshore fishing during the next two years and followed this with one year as a field worker for St. Francis Xavier University, Antigonish, N. S., in the fishing industry.

His next position was with the marketing division of the Department of Agriculture, Nova Scotia, which represented the fisheries industry prior to the establishment of the Fisheries Division within the Department of Trade and Industry.

In 1940 he accepted a position as manager of a commercial fish marketing organization in Ontario He was appointed Director of the Fisheries Division, Department of Trade and Industry in 1954.

Mr. Meagher is married to the former Mae Sylvia LeBlanc, of Yarmouth. They have five children: Michiael, 17; Peter, 16; Karen, 10; and Barbara and Bernard 4.

FROM EDMONTON

Friends here were pleased to see Mrs. Alberta Gagnon, of Edmonton, Alta., who spent a week here and left for Newfoundland, to visit places of interest in the Old Colony.

A daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Grimes of this town. Mrs. Gagnon's visit here was filled with pleasant memories of her school days and later as a teacher.

Her husband, Sam Gagnon, who passed away over a year ago was a most successful farmer. An industrial boom coming to Edmonton, prior to Mr. Gagnon's death, brought a ready sale for his valuable property, which brought an economic development to Edmonton and a financial success to Mr. Gagnon.

It was indeed, nice, seeing Alberta, who is greatly interested in her old home and was much impressed in the modern improvements found here on Isle Madame.

98th. Birthday

One of the oldest residents of Isle Madame, Mrs. Charles Landry, of Cape La Ronde, celebrated her 98th. birthday on June 8th.

Mrs. Landry still enjoys good health and takes an interest in the happenings of the community.

She received many gifts and birthday cards from friends and neighbours.

Her grand-daughter, Mrs. Amable Bonin of Arichat, and many friends called on the old lady to congratulate her and wish her continued happiness.

The Record joins in extending good wishes to Mrs. Landry.

vert the so-called Rocky Mountain Trench of British Columbia, adjacent to Banff and Jasper National Parks, into a 500-mile-long storage reservoir. It collects about 20 per cent of the surplus water from the Fraser, Yukon, Peace, Athabasca, and other rivers.

"One canal system would cut across Canada to Lake Superior, providing a navigable waterway from Vancouver, B. C. Another, by an intricate series of lift-pump systems, would flow south.

CREDIT UNION RALLY HELD AT L'ARDOISE

A Credit Union Rally was held in L'Ardoise School Gymnasium on Monday, June 8th.

Meeting was called to order by the Treasurer, Mr. Pat McCarthy followed by the singing of O Canada. After the reading of a resolution asking the members to grant permission to the Board of Directors to borrow 100% of its assets, the various committees read their reports.

The Educational Committee report was read by the secretary, Miss Mavis MacNeil, who stated that since January three meetings were held plus a joint meeting with the other Credit Union Committees and the Board of Directors. Projects throughout the year included the making of posters and the issuing of Newsletters. The Secretary, on behalf of the chairman, thanked the members for their co-operation and expressed confidence that this cooperation would continue in the future.

The Financial statement followed: Over the past five months, savings have climbed tremendously and have reached the $15000. mark. Payments on loans mountedto $16000. Interest on these loans realized the sum of $2820. $31,000. is now out on loan.

There has been an increase of 170 members since last May, making the total membership in the L'Ardoise Credit Union 524. There are 206 in the school credit union, $407 has been collected.

Guests for the evening included Theresa MacNeil and Father Campbell of the extension department and Mr. P. D. MacDonald manager of the Bergengren Credit Union in Antigonish.

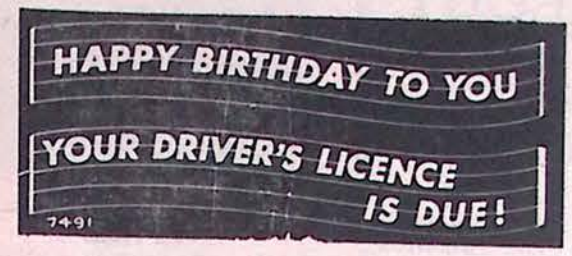

Father Campbell spoke on the importance of saving in this era of material things in everyday living. He also showed a progress chart, showing the members the progress made in their local Credit Union.

Mr. P. D. MacDonald also spoke on the importance of saving over that of borrowing our assets. He also urged the directors to work on increasing membership and urging members to be ready to fight the Royal Commission recommendations in regards to Credit Unions. He stated that with a population of over 1700 there was no reason why the people working together towards Credit Unions couldn't rise ever higher.

"Try hard and aim high," was his motto.

One of the most valued projects now carried on by the Board of Directors is the Collection Boxes, whereby Credit Union is brought to the members instead of members to the Credit Union. This has been tremendously successful.

Program for the evening was a lively sing-song led by Phyllis Baccardax in which all members participated and thoroughly enjoyed.
