SUGAR and SPICE

By Bill Smiley

THINGS WERE HECTIC!

How I envy the fellow who has two weeks holidays! He takes his family to a cottage, or on a motor trip, or out camping, and that's all there is to it. He can then go quietly and sanely back to work.

Things are pretty hectic around our place in the summer, but this was the hecticest ever. As a teacher, I'm almost frantic for school to start so I can get off the ferris wheel.

Five weeks at summer music school for Hugh. Three wetks at a different summer music school for the old lady. Two weeks at camp for Kim. Two weeks refresher course in English and two weeks as a weekly editor for me.

Now this doesn't sound so bad, when you say it quickly. But all these things were going on in different places at different times. The result was a combination of the Grand Prix, Musical Chairs, Who's Been Sleeping in My Bed? and Let's Break the Bank.

My wife gets home every Saturday night, heads for the basement with a huge armfull of soiled clothes, and we dont see her until it's time to get in the car late Sunday and charge off once again in all directions.

Last Sunday for the first time in six weeks, the four of us were under the same roof together. We were all a little uneasy at being with these strangers.

Hugh came through virtually unscathed, despite the trembling and trepidation of his parents. He talked us into extending his stay at the summer school from three to five, in a letter emphasizing the "inspiration" he was getting there.

After deep and midnight consultations, we reluctantly sent off the requisite extortion for the extra two weeks. Soon after, another letter arrived. In this one we learned he'd been out for dinner—steak and mushrooms, Chianti, the works— with a Yank girl whose father was an English teacher, was divorced, and was having an affair with the daughter of the bartender in the place they'd eaten.

Hugh's momma was ready to call out the militia, declare war on the U. S., and invade if necessary to snatch her boy back to safety. His father was trying to soothe her fears and at the same time, remembering, with not a little sadness, what he was like at that age.

However, he surprised us. He arrived home the day he was supposed to. Even more amazing, he had some money left. Completely astoundng, he looked only slightly depraved. In those five weeks, he had: become 17, fallen in love at least twice, bought a pipe and tobacco, cooked for himself for two weeks, living mainly on pablum and cheese, and been in a beer joint.

None of this bothered me too much, although his mother gave him an interrogation that would have done credit to Inspector Maigret.

Perhaps the most rugged two weeks of the summer were those I spent as a weekly editor. It all began with a wedding—my partner's, and very nearly ended with a funeral— mine.

And how doubly devasting it is to be a weekly editor in a tourist town, where every old-friend and cottager within a radius of 40 miles is hell-bent on wrecking your marriage, your constitution and, the next day, with his hospitality.

Oh well, the worst is over. There remains only a gritting of the teeth, a girding of the loins, and a hardening of the resolution, to get through the last week of summer — the weekly newspapers convention. When that's over, and I come home, a shambling skeleton, a shadow of the fine, healthy young fellow I was on the first of July, my plans are made, I phone a sanitorium, take my 20 days sick leave, and resume living about the end of September.

FLOATING FISH PLANT —This is an artist's conception of the floating fish plant to be built for Mersey Seafoods Limited of Liverpool, N. S. It will cost an estimated $500,000 and employ about 60 people.

FLOATING FISH PLANT

Trade and Industry Minister W. S. K. Jones said today a unique $500,000 floatingfish plant to be built in Liverpool, N. S., is expected to be in operation early next year.

Being developed by a group of South Shore businessmen who have incorporated under the name Mersey Seafoods Limited, the plant could add a large degree of flexibility to the province's fish processing operations.

The Maritime Commission approved a subsidy of $190,000 toward construction of the barge. The company subsequently presented to the Department of Trade and Industry the construction plans for the fish plant and a loan of $390,000 now has been approved by the provincial government.

Capable of handling 10,000,000 pounds of ground fish annually on one production line, the plant will employ about 60 people. An additional 36 will work aboard three vessels being built to help supply the raw material.

The firm was prompted to build a floating plant because preparation of a land site in Liverpool was not economically feasible.

"The eventual application of such a plant, and others like it, would be to move it to areas not served by nearby land-based plants," a company spokesman said.

"For example, such a plant could be moved to a Gulf of St. Lawrence site during good fishing periods, then be moved out when ice closed harbours.

"This type of plant construction also cuts other costs, particularly public works such as piers and highways."

Mainly a Liverpool project, the 160-foot long and 40-foot wide barge will be built by Steel and Engine Products Limited of Liverpool. Overall content will be 90 per cent Canadian.

The plant will have three decks. Heating and cooling equipment, storage space and a compact fish meal plant to utilize offal will be housed on the bottom level.

Upper decks will be for holding, processing, administrative, freezing and cold storage facilities.

Fish would move in a straight line from the conveyor bringing them to the upper deck through various processing stages to plate freezers, then to cold storage or fresh shipment.

As a pilot project the Liverpool venture has particular significance. While no two shore-based plants have identical equipment requirements, components for floating plants could be standardized.

Three fishing vessels being constructed will boost the overall cost to more than $1,000,000. One ship has already been built for Mersey Trawlers Limited, a Mersey Seafoods subsidiary. A second is under construction and the third scheduled.

Liverpool, once a thriving fishing port, has been crippled in recent years through the destruction by fire in 1956 of Nickerson Brothers Limited which operated in the town for 30 years.

Company officials point out that their proposed plant will create jobs in the area, not oniy through plant employment but in making a ready market available for inshore fishermen.

Of Many Things

By AMBROSE HILLS

THE LITTLE MAN SHOULD YELL

Once upon a time organized business put up a good fight against excessive taxes. The Canadian Chamber of Commerce and the Canadian Manufacturing association made strong representation on behalf of all taxpayers, large or small.

They did not carry enough weight.

Farm groups and consumers groups did not support them. Neither did the individual Canadian — those of us who are not organized. We did not write to our Members of Parliament. Indeed, many of us did the opposite, We encouraged the various governments to spend. We kept asking for more services.

I notice that the business community is now fighting its own battle. I believe they feel that if the little guy is not interested enough or smart enough to press for tax reductions, why do the fighting for him? Instead, business can tend to its own knitting and ask for Corporate reductions and a wider tax base. If the little people insist on all these services, might as well let them pay for it. At least let them know they are paying by making the taxes direct.

I think it is time we unorganized people did some grousing. Each of us ought to tell the politicians to cut out the heavy spending. It is a time for consolidation of the gains made. The cost of living will keep on going up unless we do. Unless we are prepared for that, the little man should yell as loud as he can.

Draggers of the Booth Fisheries Fleet, Petit de Grat, continue to bring in some good fares of fish during the past few weeks.

Fishing operations this time of year are taking place on the Grand Banks, a distance of some 500 miles from the home port of Petit de Grat and it takes from 12 to 15 days to complete a trip.

The draggers operated out of Petit de Grat are of the latest type with modern quarters for the crew.

SOME FAIRY TALE!

It has been said that the growth of Corner Brook on the west coast of Newfoundland has all the aspects of a fairy tale. In forty years it grew from a village of 300 souls to the home of an industrial giant which puffs and throbs, chewing millions of logs into fibre for the manufacture of paper, while supplying most of the earned dollars for families which represent the city's latest population figures of some 26,000.

The town itself in the early part of this century was chiefly known to Newfoundland railroaders as it was merely a whistle stop on the old Overland Route. A small settlement near the mouth of the Humber River, it got its name from this twisting river which dropped into the waters of Humber Arm. Its only industry was a sawmill that stood at the mouth of the "corner brook" owned and operated by a substantial citizen by the name of Christopher Fisher.

In 1922 an agreement was signed which established the huge newsprint industry and construction of the mill (reputedly one of the largest paper mills in the world) in the same area was undertaken by an English firm. Since then it has been owned by the International Pulp and Paper Company and in 1938, the Bowater Organization bought the operation.

After years of struggle, through the depression and a world-wide war, Corner Brook has emerged with a history of remarkable progress to its credit. It became a city in 1956, has an energetic Chamber of Commerce and from where I stood on the Golf Club's hilltop watching the mill belch its white smoke plumes skyward, it is one of the most beautiful cities, for its size, of any I have visited in my travels from one coast of Canada to the other.

Every fairy tale must have a genie or Fairy Godmother. Bowater can play both parts in the tale of Corner Brook's metamorphosis without changing character. It is true that since the war other industries have contributed to the development of Corner Brook but it is to this organization, with its world-wide distribution of paper products, that the town owes so much. Today 60 per cent of the city's employables are on the payroll of Bowater's Newfoundland Pulp and Paper Mills Limited.

The island owes much to this company for, though it controls 11,000 square miles of timber, it also employs only planned cutting ensuring that felled trees are always replaced by natural seeding. It takes seventy years for a spruce or balsam fir to mature. Not only does this firm practise cutting of the pulpwood trees, it also keeps a constant watch against the forest's greatest twin menace,, fire and pests.

DOLLARS COUNT

Bowater's annual payroll is $22,000,000. Besides this an additional $2,500,000 in purchases and other costs contributes to Western Newfoundland. The company has also played a large part in community affairs. Among its endeavors have been the construction of a delightful Inn. It has contributed to the establishment of the Golf Club and a huge recreation park with swimming facilities.

Playing its own part in Corner Brook's spectacular progress is the Canadian National Railways. This city has the added asset of the CN's terminal to offer prospective investors or industries.
