SUGAR AND SPICE by Bill Smiley

When The Well Looks Dry

Ever had your water cut off? It happened to us the other day. And that rather vulgar expression, along with an older one. You never miss the water till the well runs dry", assumed new meaning.

My wife's dad, a 110-pound strip of whipcord with one arm, suddenly got sick, one of the few times in his life. We lit out for the homestead to lend a hand while he was in the hospital.

Everything went fine until about 11 p.m. when we decided to have a cup of tea before retiring. A trickle came out of the tap and stopped.

My father-in-law is one of that vanishing species of rural dweller who, besides being able to tell the weight of a cattle-beast and know when it's going to rain, is a carpenter-bricklayer plumber mill wright. He could build a bridge across the St. Lawrence with some wire, a plank or two, a shovel, an iron bar and a couple of tin cans.

In contrast, I am one of that rapidly increasing breed that couldn't build a bridge across a trout stream with 200 tons of steel eight carloads of cedar planks, twelve bull-dozers and six civil engineers.

So there I was. Grandad in the hospital. And me out there on the ranch, with no water supply and three women on my hands, each of whom suddenly had to use the toilet and had a feverish thirst.

I tried to imbue them with the old pioneer spirit, when you had to walk two miles to the spring for water through thickets of black bears. They were not impressed. All they wanted to do was go to the bathroom.

I went down the cellar, and looked desperately around. There were switches and pumps and hot water tanks and cold water tanks and pipes running in every conceivable combination. Don't sneer Mac. Do you know the ins and outs of a pressure system?

Granny started to panic about the hot-water tank blowing up. I unscrewed some fuses. The first plunged the house into darkness. The second put the refrigerator out of order (which we discovered the next morning). I pulled a switch. The furnace went on.

I peered at pumps, gazed at gauges. Then I pronounced, "The well's gone dry." It was the only thing I could thing of, and at midnight, who was going to argue? Granny came up with some folk lore about priming the pump, but I assured her that modern electric pumps didn't need priming. We went to bed, disgruntled and thirsty as explorers of the great Gobi desert.

Bright and early, the plumber arrived. He said the first thing to do was prime the pump. He poured 842 teapots full of water down the pipe I held the flashlight. No results. Female relatives, looking a bit frantic peered down the cellar stairs about every four minutes. In the old days, there'd have been a two-holer within range. But these modern farm homes have everything. Except an outdoor privy.

Eight hours and many dollars later, we had; five men on the job; torn up a great chunk of the lawn with a digger; found the well; pulled up 90 feet of plastic pipe; lost all the females to various plumbed establishments in the town; and found the trouble.

Nope, the well wasn't dry. It was almost overflowing from all those tea-pots of water poured in. Nope the pipes hadn't burst. Yup. There was something stuck under the foot-valve. One of the legs had broken off the poppet, a 60-cent item and had prevented the jet in the foot-valve from jetting and the pump was pumping air. Now, is that clear? If it isn't, hold your peace. That's what the man said.

And it certainly helped me decide what I'm going to do in summer holidays from now on. I'm going to pick up a bunch of firm-legged poppets and go around the country helping people whose water has been cut off. Just give me a call.

STANDARDIZE FIRE HOSE COUPLINGS

Halifax — A program to standardize fire hose couplings through out Western Nova Scotia, with the exception of Lunenburg, County, has been completed, Provincial Secretary G. J. Doucet said recently.

Mr. Doucet, the minister in charge of the Emergency Measures Organization in the province said the program means that a fire department in Kings County can offer assistance to a department in Shelburne and vice-versa without running into any technical problems.

The program is based on the Halifax standard for couplings.

Standardization of such equipment would be of great benefit in a disaster, whether natural or nuclear, Mr. Doucet said.

It is anticipated that the Lunenburg program will be completed within the next two years and the remainder of the province within five years.

To date, in the Western region more than 40 fire departments and 1300 men have been involved.

Outside the Halifax-Hants area the first area to complete the standardization program was Kings, in 1963-64; then followed Digby and Annapolis in 1964, and Yarmouth, Shelburne, Queens this year.

Previously, the fire departments in this area, as in most other areas of the province, had various sized couplings which hindered mutual assistance in emergencies.

The program involves the Emergency Measures Organization (N.S.) and the Provincial Fire Marshal's Office, under whose organization, planning and supervision it is being carried out.

The program is jointly financed by the provincial and federal governments, with the former paying two-thirds the cost, including the municipalities' share.

Provincial EMO Co-ordinator Gordon Grant and Fire Marshal K. J. Partington both have expressed pleasure in the manner in which the program has been carried out and the acceptance it has received from fire departments involved.

Fire chiefs have described the program as one of the most effective contributions EMO has made to date in its emergency training program.

The co-operation received from the various departments involved has aided in the implementation of the program, said one official.

Mr. Partington said the equipment involved includes CSA standard design coupling and standard operating nuts on hydrants.

Standardization of such equipment throughout the province will mean substantial savings for departments since suppliers will have to stock only one design for each piece of equipment needed.

Diary of a Vagabond by Dorothy Barker

NATIVE ENTHUSIASM

Where the prairies gradually roll into foothills and then, in the near distance, into lofty mountains a small village grew into a town and some day could quite easily become a city. That is if the faith of the Editor of the Edson Leader in the publishing enterprise and homesite is any criterion.

There was a refreshing enthusiasm pervading the interview I had with Caston. Even though the main street was in a turmoil when I was there, with huge earth movers pushing mounds of heavy clay hither and yon, the town still had an orderly and prosperous appearance. Don't judge from this statement that everything in Edson has been "coming up roses". It has had almost as many downs as it has had ups. Dogged western determination is the cornerstone of its existance and, do or die, its citizens. Now, with trains completely dieselized, the townsfolk look to greater development of its industrial possibilities. Nearby is a gas field as a future enterprise, and a trainload of sulphur is shipped daily from the area. Inland Cement is hauling tons and tons of rock for the manufacture of its commodity and not more than four miles from the town is a sulphur spring, a potential tourist attraction.

Not every enterprise in Edson is confined to industry. It has an art centre that would inspire the youngest school child, let alone the would-be craftsmen of the community. The Edson Craft Centre was established eleven years ago. To begin with there were 60 charter members. With an inspired growth in membership the craftsmen moved to the school's woodwork shop. That first year I was told, there were looms in the library and pottery equipment in the basement of the medical centre.

An indication of the growth of this undertaking is the fact that I visited them in their permanent quarters, an old wooden church. It is ideal for the purposes of an art centre. Here I saw some of the cleverest and most original ceramics I found anywhere in the west. Looms were set up for the weavers and I was shown the tools and facilities for copper and leather workers.

It was a quiet day in mid-July when I was in Edson last year and only a few workers were intent on creating. From September to June, I learned, the little church is a hive of industry as members prepare for the annual Christmas sale and the sale to tourists. All income from sales goes to the workers. The premises are self-supporting except for water, heat and light which are provided by the town.

Dig Their Own Material

Potters use the clay from the area, digging it from ditches and excavations. If it will form a coil it is good enough when screened to throw a bun on the electric wheels or the one kick wheel. There are two electric kilns and an old refrigerator where half finished articles are stored.

Mrs. Myrtle Madge, a charter member and a clever potter indeed, told me that the pottery group mixes its own glazes. "Opening a kiln after a firing is like opening a birthday present, there is such an element of surprise and excitement", she said. I would think so, after having started their work by mixing their clay in an old washing machine!

Secretary-Manager of the town, R. C. Gregg and Mrs. L. Seldon are credited with having gotten together with the mutual inspiration- "wouldn't it be nice if we could have a craft centre in Edson".

Much has transpired since that first meeting. Alberta's Cultural Development Branch, under the Department of the Provincial Secretary, encourages Albertans to develop community arts, crafts music and even athletics. It offers scholarships amounting to $23,000. So far Edson has been considered outstanding enough in accomplishment to merit a reward,

OF MANY THINGS
(By Ambrose Hills)

CRIME & POLITICS

I've read and re-read the Dorion Report and these are some of my reactions:

1. Sympathy for the police. It is touchy business dealing with crime among politicians. A cop can get clobbered. Especially when cabinet ministers keep saying to him, "You couldn't prove this in court, could you." Seems to me Judge Dorion was right in saying the efficiency of the RCMP is beyond question. I think he might have gone even further and commended them for going as far as they did as fast as they did in such a political climate. The bigger government gets the tougher life can be for a policeman when the criminals are found in political circles. A judge is not in quite the same vulnerable position, although even Judge Dorion made changes in his report when the premier and some cabinet ministers put the heat on. I think he might have recognized the tough pisition the police were in when they had to trail the question suspects in high positions in government. It will be bad if the government uses the report as an excuse to punish the RCMP for the work it did do in bringing to light the evidence which was sufficient for Judge Dorion to clobber so many politicians!

2. Sadness regarding Favreau. He was working too hard. In my opinion, his error was a bad one and Mr. Pearson should have banished him from the Cabinet for it. But he deserves sympathy. He was trying to do the work of three good men. He will make a political comeback.

3. Confirmation of my long-held conviction that we ought not let governments grow too big or powerful. The more money they handle the more room for hanky-panky.

4. Admiration for Douglas and Nielsen, who first brought this matter to light; and particular praise Nielsen, who was willing to put his political career on the block by making firm accusations and naming names.

REDUCTION NO LONGER PRIMARY ADVANTAGE

Jasper Park Lodge — The reduction of clerical personnel, once considered the "primary advantage" of the computer, will become a secondary consideration in the future as the computer impact shifts to how a company is managed and organized, says a senior management consultant.

M. W. Hewitt of Woods, Gordon and Company, Toronto, addressing the 33rd annual convention of the Canadian Institute of Plumbing and Heating, said " as new methods are developed to exploit the computer's capabilities the organization of the company will change signficantly.

"The structure of most organizations," he said, "has become more complex over the years because it was found that as the company grew it could only be managed by dividing it into a larger and larger number of pieces.

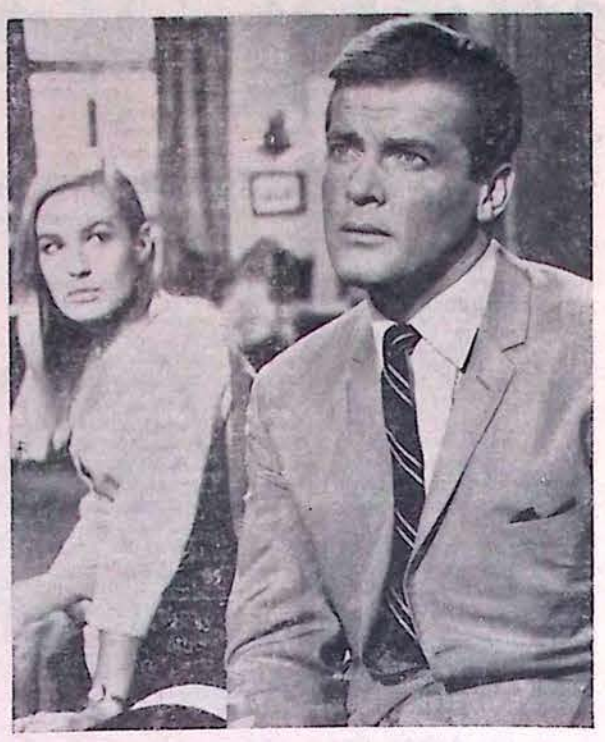

"The computer extends man's ability to manage and will likely produce a much simpler and less segmented organization in the future.

"The company will be treated more as a single unit than a collection of district functions. Bringing this about will be the computer and its central collection of informations," observed Mr. Hewitt.

"I'm going to fish for eels!"
