SUGAR AND SPICE

by Bill Smiley

Lend Me Your House

I'm deeply hurt. I've been waiting, eyes shining, cheeks glowing, mind agog, to see who was going to invite us to stay at their place while we visited Expo.

Nothing. Not a whisper. Not a murmur. Not a wire. Not even a long-distance call, collect.

Everybody else I know has a deal, of some kind. This one has relatives who are going to turn over their apartment for two weeks in August, when they go on vacation. That one is going to stay with her mother's uncle's cousin's son while his wife has her fourteenth child in hospital.

Another friend has a brother who is a big buyer for a big department store. The brother has been offered a suite of rooms at a posh motel for a week, by a big supplier of things to the big department store. Both brothers are going with their wives. This is known as public relations. We'd even settle for some private relations.

The Telegram, which dispenses this column, has not said: "We'd like you to take your family to Expo for a week. All expenses. Do a couple of columns from there." No, all they've said is, "Your column was late again last week."

Pierre Berton is going to spend two weeks with his family, at Expo, in his boat. I haven't even got a rowboat, and if I had ,I don't think we'd make it before freeze-up.

I must be fair, and admit we've had a couple of invitations to park our trailer, via Christmas cards. One was from my sister, who is about 100 miles from Expo. The other was from old buddy Gene Macdonald, who is only "an hour from Expo," probably as the jet flies. Only trouble is, we don't have a trailer, and I don't suppose there's one left for hire in the whole country. Next year will be a great year to buy used trailers.

Now, I haven't anything grand or glorious in mind. All I was thinking about was somebody who perhaps has an apartment in Montreal and a chalet in the Laurentians. If they were at the chalet, we'd be perfectly happy to look after their apartment in the city. And if they wanted to come back to the mug and muck of the city and Expo for a week, in all that heat, we'd be delighted to let them have the apartment, while we looked after the chalet.

What could be fairer than that? It isn't as though we wanted to come busting in on our relatives in Montreal even if we had any, and say,"Sorry we couldn't make it for the last 12 years, but we just couldn't resist coming to see you this year, for a Centennial Year reunion. What, Every room in the house is rented all summer? Well! Money is thicker than blood obviously."

No, that's not the idea. Not at all. We don't want to impose on anyone. We just want a quiet little place, preferably air-conditioned, that will sleep three (maybe four, as Hugh still had his hand in a cast), with free parking, not more than ten minutes from Expo, with maid service. Free.

Nothing elaborate. Nothing ostentatious. Just a simple little place to lay our heads and cook our meals and make lunches and burn holes in the chesterfield and have all OUR relatives in. Just something like home.

We wouldn't stay all summer, you know. Kim has to be home Sundays to play the organ at church. And Hugh has to be home every two weeks to have his finger re-broken, re-set, re-encased in a cast. (I think he's found his life's work.)

Besides, my wife doesn't want to go to Expo. She shudders at crowds, heat, sore feet. She says she wouldn't sleep a wink. She says we can't afford it. (That's what she said last summer, and a week later we were on a plane for Vancouver. Our fly-now pay-later plan will soon be paid for.)

Oh, well, if nobody wants us. . .

Centennial Celebrations at Louisdale

The Louisdale Centennial Celebrations will open on Saturday Ball to be held at the St. Louis night July 8th with a Centennial Parish Hall. . . Gib Whitney's Orchestre will furnish the music. This Ball will honour Canada's Century of Confederation, honour the Richmond County 25th and 50th wedding anniversary jubilarians and honour a newly married couple, Mr. and Mrs. Herman Joseph Linden. Everyone is invited to this and other events.

On July 9th, the Most Rev. William E. Power, D. D., Bishop of Antigonish will offer the Holy Sacrifice of the Mass at 9:00 A. M. All 25th and 50 th Wedding Anniversary jubliarian of Richmond County are invited to attend this mass. Scrolls will be presented to the jubilarians at dinner. This celebration will unite us with the Vanier Institute of the Family which is a vital force for the welfare of family life both at home and everywhere in Canada. The Vanier Institute is one of Canada's most important Centennial projects. . . if not the most important.

Among other things to mark the Centennial year will be the blessing of a system of electronic bells, and the blessing of a new cemetery and of a large crucifex recently installed. Also the new convent of the Daughters of Jesus will be opened and blessed.

Reference must be made to the new Elementary school recently built in Louisdale. It is likely that this building will be officially opened in the Fall. This construction is a Centennial project for the Municipality received grant for this building from a Federal Centennial Fund.

On these days of festivities the citizens of Louisdale wish to thank all for their contributions to the improvements made to make community life more wholesome.

Something To Crow About

"I have never been so proud to be a Canadian."

That was my youngest son's enthusiastic reply to my question: "What did you think of Expo?"

He is an assistant city editor on a large metropolitan daily newspaper and former entertainment columnist, I value his reaction.

There was some initial concern among the Barkers when it was decided everyone would take in the six-day trip to Expo, including two small granddaughters, aged eight and five. We feared they would tire easily and absorb little of what they saw.

But on to Expo moved the Barkers - - your writer, son and daughter-in-law and two granddaughters.

We needn't have worried.

The children have chattered constantly since their return about the children's farm, the kiddies' activity centre, and the restaurants in the various pavilions where they ate the national foods of the countries they were visiting at the time. Most of all, the 'upside down building' (Canada) and the British pavilion made the greatest impression on their young minds. Their parents encouraged them to speak French where possible, and were not a little surprised to hear the youngest saying 'Please' and 'Thank You' bilingually on many occasions without prompting or embarrassment.

We traveled on CN's Rapido between the two great metropolitan centres of Montreal and Toronto, and having given a number of TV interviews on the subject of traveling with children, I decided I had better practice what I preach.

I started with two miniature Confederation travel bags. In these I stuffed crayons, a coloring book, puzzles, small dolls with clothes that could be taken off and put back on without busting at the seams, some gaudy costume jewelry and 'kiddie cosmetics'. There was a little package of homemade cookies in each bag and a tiny book of riddles.

They called the train their magic carpet and being content and interested for four hours and 59 minutes each way, they became the darlings of the child-loving porters in charge of their club car accommodation.

But back to the fair, I was particularly impressed by their parents' comments about 'learning the ropes' and getting the most out of a visit to Expo. The first day they were a bit discouraged with the long line-ups at most of the pavilions. Then they learned about "RESERVEXPO". This is the free Expo service which permits visitors to pick up advance tickets in the morning for the shows later in the day. The service utilizing IBM computer terminal equipment, is being provided at the Information Kiosks by Expo 67 hostesses. Tickets are available at the information kiosks at Place d'Accueil and on the site. Obtaining their tickets each morning as they arrived by Expo Express, meant they were admitted regularly with a minimum wait of ten minutes.

Commission Has Created Scholarships

Expo has provided an unusual means of offering scholarships to students with sufficiently high marks for entering university. A CN Centennial Scholarship Plan has been established by Canadian National to help finance the university education of its employees' and pensioners' dependents.

The plan is financed by the money the company received as commission when it sold to employees, at reduced rates and under the payroll deduction plan, Expo 67 passports.

The commission amounted to $40,000 and it will be used exclusively for the scholarship fund. In addition, CN will match the yearly interest on the fund's balance and will cover at its own expense all the administration costs of the plan.

Under the plan, ten$600 scholarships will be awarded annually over the next 10 years, starting this fall. That's 100 scholarships - - one for each year of Confederation.

Any student whose parent or guardian is a CN line employee in Canada or pensioner can apply for a scholarship.

The scholarship awards will be made to successful applicants entering or enrolled in any Canadian university or college which is a member or affiliated member of the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada.

CENTENNIAL CELEBRATIONS IN HALIFAX

For the 10 days following June 21, Halifax should be the swingingest city in Canada.

This historic port city will celebrate Canada's Centennial and its own 218 birthday with a 10-day party that will have entertainment for all age groups.

In addition to scheduling a full series of events from a gigantic garden party to a Jolly Tar Hornpipe, the city will play host to thousands of foreign sailors here for the first international naval assembly. Governor General Michener will pay his first official visit to Halifax to review the ships lined up in Halfax harbour. The decorated ships will form an impressive spectacle both day and night and their international personnel will participate in a parade June 22 through city streets.

Athletic and cultural events will make up the program for the majority of the centennial festivities. There will be judo championships, a snooker tournament, in addition to little league baseball, lawn tennis and bowling, basketball, and cricket. Playlets in the Grand Parade and Public Gardens at noon, folk and international naval band concerts will augment the showing of paintings by Nova Scotia artists in the Citadel Art Gallery and the stamp and coin collection in the Halifax North Library for the cultural side of the picture.

Those who check their watches by the familiar noon-day gun on Citadel Hill will be in for a surprise on July 1. On that day, a 100 gun salute will boom out over the city to mark Canada's anniversary of Confederation.

There will be continuous programs for Halifax's children and youth. Several teen dances will be staged throughout the 10-day celebrations and high school students have organized a cultural display, an athletic meet and an interdenominational youth church service on June 25.

Many of the events are focussed on June 28, Halifax's birthday. From the street parade in the morning to the fireworks at night, there will be a full program of activities, including a picnic on Citadel Hill, athletic events, a sailing regatta, a singalong, the fireman's variety show, dances and a Jolly Tar Hornpipe, a free outdoor entertainment feature at the Garrison Grounds.

Throughout the celebration period, Halifax will salute the 10 provinces of Canada, beginning with Newfoundland on the 21st. Visitors signing in at the Halifax Tourist Bureau from the province being honored that day, will receive a memento of their stay in Halifax.

4-HERS IN CAMP AT S8. GEORGE'S CHANNEL

By Jack Redden

4-H Representative

One hundred and five 4-Hers registered at the first Regional 4-H Camp at St. George's Channel, Richmond County. These 4-H Club Members were from Cape Breton Island, Antigonish-Guysboro Counties. The Weatherman could not have been more co-operative during June 27-29 to make camp very pleasant for everyone.

The program covered a large number of topics. They included a nature hike, swimming, softball and other sports, discussion groups project training sessions, a hot chocolate house and a fireside program. Club Members were responsible for organizing and planning particular parts of the program. The highlight with girls would have been the Fashion Show put on by Simplicity Patterns.

To develop a four-square 4-Her—one who develops spiritually, mentally, physically and socialally. We also had morning worship and flag raising service. Rev. George Arsenault, St. Joseph du Moine, lead the 4-H members in an Evening Vesper Servce.

I would like to thank our 12 4-H leaders and junior leaders who attended camp. They were certainly helpful in keeping everything running smoothly.

This camp was terrific and I can only agree with the comment made by a little campjer, "You can count me in next year. I wouldn't miss this."

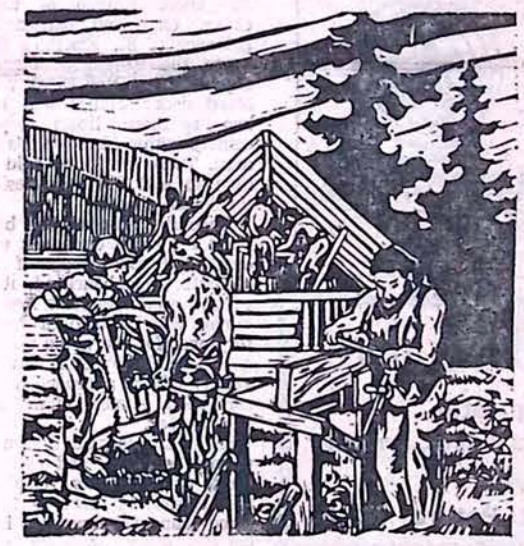

the acadian times

all GROWS well at PORT ROYAL

I doubt not that the official chronicles of these early years in New France will be most ably written by such notables as M. de Monts (who hath lately brought us safely to these shores of Acadia), M. de Poutrincourt and others such as M. Champlain.

Thus your humble servant would not presume to tell of those main, shaping acts that unborn generations shall call history lest his words seem like poor, frail, hollow echoes of what better men might pen.

Yet certain events there are that, wandering from the main stream of events, must go unnoted by those who steer our enterprise through broader waters. These rivulets I shall attempt to chart and so give common readers uncommon tales Thus:

Nova Scotia Artist J. E. McClelland

". . . our daily efforts went into the making of . . . furniture to make our rude dwellings fit."

PORT ROYAL, July 1605

—Having passed a melancholy winter on the island of St. Croix, our expedition, with some forty others lately come from France, has now determined this place from whence I write shall be our major settlement upon these shores.

It has taken much pain, labour, even death to come to this decision. Our boats have travelled many leagues north, south and west to find a harbour worthy of our enterprise and fitting for our needs. Yet none was found to equal this fair haven.

So, with prodigious ef rt; stores, tools, buildings all have been transported here and we have left upon St. Croix a hut and the graves of thirty-six comrades.

Though the deaths are sad to record, I would not have you think that all our days upon the isle were black. At our first arrival in the spring, the savages of those parts did crowd upon our lodgings and our ships. So eager and so curious did they seem that one might think they were but painted children 'round a toy.

But though we laugh at their amazement of what to us seems common, I sometimes wonder if their curiosity is not a virtue we might well adopt in our perusing them. While these untaught, unschooled and childlike folk have wit to ape and study us, we deem time spent considering their ways to be a waste.

But to speak more of our savages of St. Croix and of the high esteem in which they held our customs . . . they asked us to be arbiters in their internal quarrels. And so it was the wise and ancient laws of France were used to good effect upon a people knowing nothing of rules and writs or even France herself.

But though some small time was spent in sitting on a bench, more of our daily efforts went into the making of them and all the other furniture to make our rude wood dwellings fit.

Neither was the soil neglected. Our leader, M. de Monts, turned to the land as readily as he had turned to the law and the first rye sown in the New-World was planted on St. Croix. Like a true firstborn it flourished exceedingly, raising all our expectations high.

Yet rye alone was not enough. When winter came our stores of food and water dwindled as did the hours of daylight. We were visited with such cold as none before had known. Cider froze in the cask and each man cut his portion. Bodies thus weakened, fell easy prey to the unknown disease so that he that lived to see the spring and the coming of new ships from France counted himself so well served that all the labours of settling this new plantation here in Port Royal seemed light and lovely to what had gone before.

Now again good fortune smiles and all have high hopes for success. The shores are thickly forested, supplying wood for fuel and shelter; game for food abounds and the land, new tilled and seeded, promises to give forth more plentifully than we had dared believe.

BRIDGETOWN, 1967 —The Acadian explorers had to do a little of everything: map, build, farm; make laws and administer them, and act as judges. There was never a dull moment, it seems.

The distillery business demands this "master of all trades" approach too. Success in this field, which is as much art as business, depends on a good knowledge of the right grains, building for the right storage and mapping out the right things to do to ensure a rye-whisky superb!

It doesn't require making laws and the judging is done by the customers who, as shown by sales, consider the handwork of the Acadian Distillers to be tops in the field.

St. Martha's To Share Red Cross Blood Bank

On July 1st, St. Martha's Hospital, Antigonish, joins the other hospitals of Nova Ssotia in sharing the Red Cross Blood Bank in Halifax.

After that date St. Martha's will no longer have to solicit donations of blood on the local level. Hitherto, the hospital maintained a list of doners to be called upon in times of emergency or when the supply on hand had dwindled. "We expect to keep that list for possible emergencies," Sister Marie Loyola, Hospital Administrator says, "but for all practical purposes, we shall be getting twice-weekly supplies direct from the Red Cross in Halifax."

Sister Marie Loyola praised the citizens of Antigonish town and county and the students of St. Francis Xavier University for their generosity in keeping St. Martha's blood bank supplied. Members of the hospital staff, she said, had repeatedly given blood. "The new system, direct participation in the Red Cross Blood Transfusion Service, will be the advantage of the hospital and the people of the area it serves," the administrator said.

To prepare for the switch-over to Red Cross service, Dr. H. C. Reid, Medical Director of Red Cross Blood Transfusion Service, recently addressed the medical staff of St. Martha's on the operation and benefits of the service.

Donald L. Gillis, President of the Antigonish Branch of the Red Cross, expressed satisfaction at entrance of St. Martha's Hospital in to the Provincial plan. It is expected that Red Cross volunteer blood donor clinics will be held two or three times a year at centres within St. Martha's service area. These would be held at Antigonish and Port Hawkesbury in the initial stages.

Since the hospital has been relying for blood donations upon its own staff and people of its immediate neighbourhood, it is expected that the first Red Cross clinics will be held in Antigonish for donorsfor the whole area. Authorities at St. Francis Xavier University will be approached to sponsor special student clinics at least once a year.

Sister Loyola said that with improved service and communications, St. Martha's Hospital can now contribute more to the total blood transfusion service by joining the other hospitals of Nova Scotia in the Red Cross plan.

This was a well received Centennial project for West Arichat and the residents of that place are to be congratulated on their splendid efforts in sponsoring the Caravan to their community and the courtesy extended to the hundreds of visitors was another example of Acadian hospitality.

Much credit goes to Rev. Father A. Doucet, for the splendid part he played in bringing the Caravan to West Arichat.

An illustrated account of the interior of the various trailers was featured in coloured phamphlets and gave visitors to the Caravan a first-hand picture of Canada's vast resources from coast to coast.

Meals were served at the K.O.C. Hall sponsored by the ladies of the parish.
