SEVENTY SECOND YEAR — THE RICHMOND COUNTY RECORD, ARICHAT, N. S. AUGUST 8 1970

Oh, for the life of a teacher

Show me a teacher in June, and I'll show you a character with a crumpled shirt, a wrinkled brow, and a desperate look in his eyes.

His spirit is treading the lush green of the golf course. His inward eye is contemplating the dark swirl of water under a log in a trout stream. And his winter-fat, pudgy body is there in the classroom, which is more like a steam bath. Room temperature, 90 degrees.

Before him loll about 30 students, eyes glazed, minds turned to something important, like a swim, or a joyride, or just lying in the sun.

Chief difference between them is that the kids are arrayed in their coolest, while he, adhering to some ancient and ridiculous tradition, quietly steams in his swaddling of shirt and tie, jacket and trousers.

The students are there only because they have to stick around to write last-hope tests, and find out whether they've been promoted or have to write the "finals." The teacher is there only because somebody, in his infinite wisdom, has decreed that school will continue until a certain day in June.

It's not exactly what we in the so-called profession's jargon call "a good learning situation."

Someday, someone with some common sense is going to close the schools on the first day of June, and open them on the first day of August. June is a month for joy in Canada, not imprisonment in a sauna bath. The days are long, the mosquitoes haven't really found the range, and the world is green and glorious.

By August the sun has lost some of its blast, the days are shorter and that first wild lust for the lushness of summer has abated. School could run from 7 a.m. to 1 p.m., and there'd still be a decent chunk of a summer day to be enjoyed.

It's not only the heat that makes June rough for teachers. It's the last-minute panic. There are 64 memos from the office, telling you to be in three places and doing three different things, at the same time. Or so it seems.

There are the final exams to set, supervise and mark. There are marks to be mustered that would murder a mathematician, and written down in six different places. There are new books to be ordered, and old books (about 10,000 in my case) to be sorted and counted and stored. And everything is to a deadline that always seems to be yesterday.

Some of the young, new teachers find it a traumatic experience. Something like trying to milk a cow while looking over your shoulder for the dangerous bull known to be in the same field. The oldtimers just get irascible, and ignore the bull.

But who can complain? There is the deep satisfaction of knowing that Joe Dough has passed and somebody else will have to teach him next year, that Naughty Nancy, she of the cocky walk and the talky talk, has her ring, and will be driving nobody crazy next year except the poor simpleton who gave it to her.

There is the sincere satisfaction of knowing that some of your graduating students will probably contribute a lot more to the world than you have, as doctors, nurses, teachers, engineers.

There is a special touch of sadness when the kids in the two-year course, who are finished with education, probably forever, inarticulately tell you they have enjoyed their year with us. Their future is not in pastel shades. They seem so young and vulnerable. You have a great wish that at least they'll find happiness, if not affluence.

And finally, there are two glorious months ahead in which you don't have to leap to your feet and scuttle somewhere like Pavlov's rats, every time a bell rings. I think I'll stick it for another year.

While we still linger with our dreams
Of life whose ways we must condone;
Time takes them one by one it seems,
Loved ones and friends that we have known.

To them no splendor sweeps the West,
No flowery field or forest glade;
No evening bell will break their rest,
Though winds will weep where they are laid.

In 1967 a program conceived and largely executed by Glenn Gould won high critical acclaim. On The Idea of North, Gould used the north to illustrate different levels of solitude and how enforced solitude affects people. Forsaking the concert stage, Gould turned his genius to the radio and TV media and with laudatory results. The Idea of North was repeated on August 4 and on August 5, a visual version was telecast on CBC-TV. So on two successive nights, Gould afficionados had a chance to hear and see — the work of this musician-turned-broadcaster.

During the recent royal tour Canada's eyes focused on the northland with an interest they've rarely shown before. Another segment of the population, largely ignored up till now, are the Acadians, the earliest settlers of the Maritimes who for 300 years have clung to the culture and language of their ancestors. Now they've reached a crossroads — do they move to the English-dominated Maritime centres, or migrate to Quebec? Soundings, August 5, took a close look at what someone has called the attempted genocide of a people.

Now that Peter Gzwoski, ex-editor of Maclean's magazine, has become disenchanted with the publishing world, he's getting more involved in broadcasting. He's currently replacing Bruno Gerussi while Bruno takes a well-deserved holiday and the week of August 3-7 was one of the guests on Four For Forty. He's still heard regularly, of course, on the weekly phone-out current affairs show, Radio Free Friday.

CBC Stage on August 1 and 8 turns its attention to the words of two Russian writers. The first one, St. Petersburg by Andrey Biely, concerns a father-son relationship in the pre-revolutionary city. A somewhat earlier St. Petersburg (now Leningrad) is portrayed in the August 8 production of an adaptation of Dostoievsky's White Nights. It is the story of a brief encounter of two very young people in the heady air of an early spring night. Both plays are produced in Vancouver by Norman Newton.

Toronto housewife Helen French has been at it again — writing, that is, for five hours a day ("just to avoid all that housework"). She's come up with five witty plays for Theatre 10.30, Some Senior Eccentrics. Broadcast the week of August 3, they're all about the geriatric generation, and in each the central character is neither as senile or stupid as they're made out to be. A refreshing change from the usual youth cult.

Internationally-renowned soprano Lois Marshall is heard on two CBC radio programs this month. The first, on the Celebrity Recital portion of CBC Thursday Music (August 6) was recorded at Memorial University at St. John's, and in it Miss Marshall sings songs by Purcell, Schubert, two arias from Manon Lescaut by Puccini, six Maritime folksongs and seven popular Spanish folksongs. On CBC Tuesday Night (August 11), in a concert recorded as part of the CBC Manitoba Centennial Festival, Miss Marshall and bass-baritone Peter van Ginkel are featured in an evening of opera, performing works by Mozart, Gounod and Verdi.
